You have no doubt noticed that the fellows who do the "swearing off" act along about the first of the year, nearly always belong to a class who can do the swearing all right.

The deputy inspector of dairies for Coos county, who by the way is a woman, created a mild sensation the other day at the meeting of the Oregon Dairy Association, by stating that on her rounds she visited one dairyman who kept his separator in the cow shed and after putting the milk through, and not having a rag handy, took off a sock to wash the separator with. This probably sounded funny to Mrs. Yoakam but it didn't sound good to the dairymen of Coos and the consumers of our dairy products. Truth is Mrs. Yoakam went entirely too far in making the remark—but a woman has to talk. However, Mrs. Yoakam is a first class inspector in a good many respects.—Myrtle Point Enterprise.

In our humble opinion, as a user of dairy butter, it was the man who took off his sock that went entirely too far—but a man must talk, and we are aware that tastes differ.

James Dryden who has charge of the poultry department at the experiment station at the Oregon Agricultural College is sending out a list of questions to farmers and poultry-keepers throughout the state, covering nearly every phase of the poultry business. The idea is to get the observations of those engaged in this industry, not for publication, but the proposition is to make a summary of the facts secured and publish the same in bulletin form. In a multitude of counselors there is safety and much valuable information will no doubt be secured. The poultry business is one of our growing industries, and yet it don't appear to be growing at a pace sufficient to keep up with the growing demands of the trade in eggs and market poultry. If you have not already received one of these circulars drop a card to Mr. Dryden, O. A. C., Corvallis, and ask for one. The questions asked are practical and any one interested in the poultry business ought to do all they can to encourage this new movement.

You no doubt have noticed that church attenders, however pious they may be, will occasionally be overcome by drowsiness, no difference how interesting the sermon may be. Possibly you may have at times been in this class yourself and have pinched yourself and tried all manner of means to overcome your embarrassing physical condition. A German psychologist speaking of the cause says: "It is not because the worshippers are weary, or bored, or lulled by the warmth of the church. It is because they so concentrate their attention on the preacher, stare at him so fixedly that they hypnotize themselves, fall into a hypnotic trance-sleep. Fewer women than men go to sleep during the sermon because a woman, however pious, can not keep her eyes off another woman's becoming gown or new hat, so that the feminine worshippers' wandering glances prevent them from falling into auto-hypnosis. The psychologist says the clergymen are to blame in a measure, for the sleepers that confront them. The preachers would do well to move about as much as possible, to make many gestures and to vary their monotonous tones." This is asking too much of the preachers. Why not inaugurate a system of varied styles for men's hats, trimmed with flowers and birds feathers and suits of shining silks and satins to attract the attention of the men folks.

The Jacksonville Post had a column of bright sayings last week under the head of "Holiday Greetings," clippings from various authors, and among others we note the following by Riley: "A word of Godspeed, and good cheer to all on earth, or far or near, or friend or foe or thine or mine in echo of the voice Divine. Heard, when the star bloomed and lit the world's race, with God's smile on it." And sandwiched in below was the reminder that "the intense itching characteristic to these ailments is almost instantly allayed by Chamberlain's Salve etc.," and followed at intervals by others of a like nature. A very interesting column of holiday greetings indeed.

Almost every morning a number of dressed hogs are piled on the trucks at the railway station for shipment to Portland. Along next summer and fall the cured meat and lard from these same porkers will be shipped back to Newberg and the farmers who sold the hogs will come to town and buy the meat and lard for home consumption. The S. P. company 'ketes 'em a comin' and a goin', while the honest but improvident toiler pays the freight, both ways.

James A. Finch was found guilty of the murder of Ralph B. Fisher, the jury returning with a decree of murder in the first degree after being out thirty minutes. No honest, conscientious set of men could have done anything else. It was a plain case of murder and the public is pleased with the speedy trial and conviction.

The loss of life by the awful disaster in Southern Italy resulting from an earthquake will probably prove to be the worst ever known. The dead in two cities number 110,000 and other places will increase the number, probably another 100,000, to say nothing of the wounded and homeless.

A number from here attended the Carnival at Newberg Monday night. They viewed the ferocious beasts which were indeed ferocious (?) but were in strong cages, heard the Jubilee Singers which if put to soak in water would have turned white, saw many wonderful things and lastly viewed the basket ball games and the little brown cub bear which was a reality and are wondering when there will be another carnival.
