PANIC IN SHIPWRECK.

When Men Lose Their Wits and Their Manhood as Well.

What has most struck me in my many experiences of shipwreck has been the strangely diverse ways in which the passengers acquit themselves under intense excitement and panic, said a lifeboatman to the writer.

Women cry, faint and cling to each other, but are least trouble. Men often act very strangely. I remember one man throwing into the lifeboat a heavy trunk which he wanted to save, but which we promptly heaved overboard.

Some men become quite panic stricken. I've seen strong men, probably brave enough in other cases, fighting fiercely for the life-buoys and thrusting the women and children aside in frantic endeavors to leap into the boat first; yet, strangely enough, one man who thus disgraced himself has since obtained the Royal Humane society's medal for saving life at sea, thrice volunteering with a scratch crew in aid of a distressed vessel.

I've known others who became so stupefied with fright as to resist all attempts at rescuing them, begging to be left to die and having to be forcibly thrown into the lifeboat. Some persons frequently become half demented, and I've known several cases where they have in a frenzy committed suicide by positively jumping headlong into the sea and drowning themselves, and one man, to insure his sinking, filled his pockets with coal.

Some years ago another passenger, hearing the ship had struck, went and drowned himself in the bathroom, anticipating his fate, as it were.

I remember another case where a passenger hanged himself in his cabin just as the lifeboat arrived.—Pearson's Weekly.

The Art of Advertising.

How to achieve publicity for commercial purposes is a subject on which a vast amount of brain tissue is constantly being expended. A writer in the Chicago Tribune contributes this as the latest triumph of the advertiser.

Suddenly the lecturer's voice failed him.

"Gentlemen," he asked huskily, "does any person in the audience happen to have a box of Blank's throat tablets about him?"

"Yes, sir," instantly responded a tall, thin man in a suit of faded black, rising and making his way to the platform. "Here you are."

"Thanks," wheezed the orator, taking the box, extracting a tablet and placing it in his mouth. "I carelessly left mine at home."

Half a minute later he resumed his lecture with a voice as clear as a bell.

There is more than one way to bring a thing before the public.

The Wonderful Banana.

Some people believe that the banana was the original forbidden fruit of the garden of Eden. In any case, it is one of the curiosities of the vegetable kingdom, being not a tree, a palm, a bush, a shrub, a vegetable or an herb, but a herbageous plant with the status of a tree. Although it sometimes attains a height of thirty feet, there is no woody fiber in any part of its structure, and the bunches growing on the dwarf banana plant are often heavier than the stalk which supports them. No other plant gives such a quantity of food to the acre as the banana. It yields forty-four times more by weight than the potato and 133 times more than wheat. Moreover, no insect will attack it, and it is always immune from disease of any kind.

Oxford Hospitality.

Oxford has traveled very far from the condition of things observed by a German explorer toward the end of the eighteenth century. He had arrived at the city at midnight and was introduced by a good Samaritan to the Mitre. Here, to his intense astonishment, he saw several gentlemen in academic dress seated round a table, each with a pot of beer in front of him. "My health," says the traveler, "was drunk in strong ale. At last, as morning drew near, one of the company exclaimed rather emphatically, 'I must read prayers this morning at All Souls.'"—London Chronicle.

Family Pride.

Mrs. F. was doing her best to amuse and entertain her strenuous five-year-old grandson and namesake, Ford, being in turn every animal which his fancy dictated. Finally, after unusual exertion, she asked, "Does your Grandma M. play with you this way?"

Drawing himself up proudly, Ford replied, "I'd have you know, my Gran'me M. is a perfect lady!"—Harper's Magazine.

African Game Trails.

The work will contain a complete index, an essay on the Pig Skin Library, between 200 and 300 perfect illustrations and maps made by Kermit Roosevelt and the official photographers on the spot, selected and carefully arranged by Mr. Roosevelt personally. The work will be completed in one large octavo volume of more than 500 pages.

On account of its historical value, Mr. Roosevelt has made the price low, so as to be within the reach of all. The work will be published by Charles Scribner's Sons, which it is needless to say is a guarantee that the work will not only be delivered on time but will be equal to the highest standard of modern book making—paper, type, illustrations, etc. The price of the work complete will be $3.75 in the cloth binding. The illustrations, which are particularly valuable, were taken from actual photographs. It is hard at first to appreciate the permanent value of this great book, and it is really worthy of a good substantial binding. We have accordingly prepared a fine half morocco edition, which may be had at $5.75, and a still finer edition, bound in three-fourths pig skin, at $9.75. We do not believe that you can afford to pass up this opportunity, and I shall be glad to have your order for either style binding you desire. Frank Wood, Local Agent.
