Newberg GraphicA GALLANT BRIGAND.

The Test of a Woman Saved Her From Being Robbed.

The saying that there is honor among thieves suggests the thought that if the virtue began a little further back it might prevent any practice of the profession. However, brigandage being an established fact, one may permit himself to admire the gallantry displayed by the bandit whose exploit is described by Andrew F. Crosse in his book "Around About the Carpathians."

A certain lady, the widow of a wealthy man of title, inhabited a lonely castle not far from the route between Buda and Vienna. One morning she received a polite note requesting her to provide that night at 10 o'clock a supper for twelve gentlemen.

She knew at once the character of her self invited guests and devised a novel mode of defense. She dared not send for aid, for she knew every road between the castle and any town would be watched to prevent communication, so she made her own plans.

At 10 that evening up rode an armed band of twelve. The great gate of the outer court was thrown open as if for an honored guest.

The lady herself, richly dressed, stood at the entrance to receive. She at once selected the chief, bade him welcome and gave orders that the horses should be well cared for. Then, taking the arm of the chief, she led the way to the dining room.

A goodly feast was spread on the table, and the sideboards were covered with a magnificent display of gold and silver plate.

The leader of the robber band started back in surprise; but, recovering his presence of mind, he calmly seated himself by his hostess.

When the meal was nearly finished the chief took out his watch.

"Madam," he said, "the happiest moments of my life have always been the shortest. I have another engagement tonight which I must keep, but before I go allow me to tell you that in appealing to my honor as you have tonight you have saved me from the commission of a crime. Bad as I am, no one ever appealed to my honor in vain. As for my men, I charge them to take nothing from this house. He who disobeys dies that instant."

The brigand then asked for paper and pen and wrote a few sentences in strange characters.

"If you or your retainers ever lose anything," he added to his hostess, "post this publicly in the nearest town, and I pledge my word the missing article shall be returned."

The band departed. A few weeks later the chief was captured and hanged. He proved to be the impoverished younger son of a noble family of Hungary.

Fox's Will.

The following is one of the many stories told about Charles James Fox, the English statesman and orator:

Mr. Hare, envoy to the court of Poland, occupied rooms in the statesman's "diggings." He was a great personal friend and indeed a man of very similar tastes. They were each the objects of continual inquiry on the part of tradesmen and others. One day Fox, looking out of the upper window, decreed two men watching the house and waiting. With a genial smile he shouted, "Pray, gentlemen, will you tell me, are you Fox hunting or Hare hunting today?"

The bailiffs were so tickled that they went away.

Treasure Trove.

Treasure trove is the description given to valuables, such as coin, gold or silver plate or bullion, found hidden in the ground or some private place, the owner being unknown. According to the Roman law, such treasure, if found by a man on his own land, belonged to the finder, but if found on the land of another was divided between the finder and the landowner. According to English law treasure trove belongs to the state, and concealment by the finder is an indictable offense, punishable by fine and imprisonment. If, however, the treasure is not actually covered by earth it belongs to the finder.

After Her.

"Darling," said the count, "I have loved you from the moment I first feasted my eyes upon you."

"It is very kind of you to say so," replied the daughter of the American millionaire, "but I am compelled to inform you that I wouldn't give 10 cents to become a countess."

"Well, please don't engage yourself to anybody else until I can communicate with my brother, who is a marquis. We must get you into our family somehow."—Chicago Record-Herald.

OILED THE RAILS.

The Way a Runaway Locomotive Was Conquered.

One dark night when a conductor was taking three passenger cars through to a town called Sunbury he noticed the headlight of a locomotive in his rear. He instantly informed the engineer of the fact, and both began to speculate what it meant. The train was running at a high speed, but the headlight in the rear was steadily gaining on them.

As no lights were displayed in the rear of the headlight, they concluded that it must be an empty engine.

The road twists in and out among the mountains and skirts the banks of the Susquehanna river in such a way as to permit any one looking back to observe what is going on in the rear for a considerable distance.

The conductor ordered the engineer to put on more steam, so the latter pulled the throttle wide open. Then followed a wild chase. Pursued and pursuer tore along at the highest speed. Everybody on the cars believed that the engineer of the pursuing engine was either drunk or crazy.

Finally a bright idea occurred to the passenger engineer. He recalled the fact that a locomotive can make but little progress on greasy rails. Accordingly the contents of two large cans of lard oil were poured on the track from the rear of the last passenger coach. The idea proved a good one. Soon the headlight of the pursuing engine grew dim in the distance, and when it was safe to do so the train stopped and backed up to solve the mystery. An odd sight was revealed.

One of the finest engines on the road had broken away from the train shed at Williamsport and started down the track on a voyage of destruction. The oil poured on the track had baffled all the destructive ability that the locomotive possessed. There it stood, puffing and snorting and pawing like a wild steer, the driving wheels buzzing around on the greased track like a flywheel in a machine shop, but moving hardly an inch.

Not a sign of engineer was found, and the fireman of the pursued train mounted the engine and shut her off. She was towed into Sunbury, and there a dispatch was found ordering the crew to a side-track out of the way of the runaway.—Harper's Weekly.

Science the Mother of Cities.

Attention may be invited to the interesting fact that at the beginning of the last century not a single city in Christendom had so many as a million inhabitants. In 1806 Paris had 548,000, and in 1801 London had 864,000. Great cities could not exist then as the advance of science has enabled them to exist today. Science has helped the cities not only by conquering pestilence and teaching the laws of health, but by enabling them to draw their supplies from the remotest quarters of the earth instead of being dependent for food, as was the case at the opening of the nineteenth century, upon the region of country immediately surrounding them.—Detroit Free Press.

His Ambition.

The reader of plays sighed wearily.

"I started out in life," he said, "to make friends. See the result. In one year I have gained 2,000 bitter enemies, 7,000 associate enemies and 11,000 enemies by marriage. How many plays in the last bunch, John?"

"Two hundred and twenty-nine, sor."

"Send 'em all back."

"But you haven't looked them over, sor."

"Never mind that. I'm going to establish an enemy record if it takes every play in Christendom."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Effect of Gravitation.

If a man weighing 170 pounds were to be transferred to the moon the weight of his body, measured at least by the attraction which the moon would exercise upon it, would be reduced to about thirty pounds. If his muscles and his frame remained the same it would seem as if he would be able to jump over a wall twelve feet high on the small globe without any greater exertion than would be required to clear a wall two feet high on the earth.

The Emerald.

Emeralds from India, Persia and Peru are the most valuable. According to their tints and their luster, they are classed as prasiannes, neronianes and domitianes. According to Suetonius, Nero used to look at the fighting gladiators in his emerald. The stone is the emblem of charity, hope, joy and abundance. It had the reputation in olden times of curing epilepsy by application and of being an all round pain killer.
