WALNUT GRANGE MEETING

The following news note came in too late for publication last week:

At the meeting of Walnut Grange, south of Dundee, on last Saturday afternoon, several new members were initiated. An interesting program was given and several excellent papers were read and followed by discussions.

A paper by Mrs. Leland, showing the great value of birds to farmers and fruit growers and the necessity for their preservation was both instructive and entertaining. The subject of road laws and road construction was taken up by Mr. Forbes and the use of convict labor as an ideal method of obtaining good roads at a minimum cost was advocated. In another interesting and helpful paper by Mrs. Coleman, profitable and practical method of disposing of the surplus fruit on the farm was outlined.

It is hoped at each meeting to have subjects of general interest and practical benefit for discussion so that each and every one may feel well repaid for the time spent and that they may carry away with them new ideas and ambitions. In view of the approach of the busy season of the year it was decided that the Grange meetings should be held but once a month during the Summer months, on the fourth Saturdays.

A Rude Man.

She was from Boston; he from Oklahoma. "You have traveled a great deal in the West, have you not, Miss Bacon?"

"Oh, yes, indeed—in California and Arizona and even in New Mexico."

"And did you ever see the Cherokee strip?"

There was a painful silence, but finally she looked over her glasses at him and said:

"Sir, I deem your question exceedingly rude."—The Pathfinder.

HIS OWN MEDICINE.

A Woman Handed a Draft of it to Philanthropist Corcoran.

The late W. W. Corcoran, the millionaire philanthropist of Washington, who gave to the city the magnificent art gallery which bears his name, was very fond of telling how he was once overmatched by a wealthy maiden lady from whom he desired to purchase a piece of property.

Mr. Corcoran was the owner of the Arlington hotel, at the corner of Vermont avenue and H street. Adjoining the hotel property on the H street side was a handsome brownstone mansion, owned by the maiden lady. The lot upon which the house was built extended back to I street, a distance of 400 feet, and abutted on the rear of the hotel property.

Mr. Corcoran found it necessary to enlarge the hotel property and with this end in view desired to purchase the rear end of the lot owned by the maiden lady. As she was very wealthy, he knew that a large price would not be any special inducement and for a time was at a loss to know exactly how to approach her. He finally concluded to go straight to the point and therefore addressed her the following note:

Dear Miss C.—How much will you take for your back yard? We wish to enlarge the Arlington hotel. Yours sincerely, W. W. CORCORAN.

Promptly came the reply:

Dear Mr. Corcoran—How much will you take for the Arlington hotel? We wish to enlarge our back yard. Yours cordially, A. C.

Not on Him.

Several years ago Patrolman Grampke was detailed at a circus that was performing in Camp Washington. One of the features of the show was the falling into the ring of one of the actors, in tattered clothes, who pretended to be drunk. He would then pick himself up and finally would mount one of the most spirited horses in the ring. One by one he would then throw off his garments until he stood forth resplendent in pink tights.

The first night that Grampke was on duty the stunt was to be pulled off as usual, but no sooner had the apparently drunken one got into the ring than Grampke was in after him. He jerked the performer to his feet and hustled him outside, where he proceeded to administer a good beating. The other employees of the show rushed out and finally separated Grampke from his victim and explained that it was all a joke.

"A joke, is it?" said Grampke, as he looked at the disheveled man. "Well, it isn't on me."—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Prevention Not Better Than Cure.

Colonel Scotchman was weary. He had had a very arduous day retreating from the enemy, and he wished to recoup his strength in order that he might retreat still farther on the morrow.

"MacPherson," he said to his new servant, "I'm going to snatch forty winks' sleep. Stay by my tent and see that I'm not disturbed."

Mac saluted. Five minutes later the snores of Colonel Scotchman were cut short by the loud report of a gun.

"Great Scott!" cried the colonel. "Are the enemy upon us?"

"Na, dinna fret," replied Mac, inserting his head reassuringly through the tent flap. "It was only a wee mouse. But as I thought he might wake you up, I shot him."

One on Father.

Herbert, aged four and a half, had annoyed his father until that individual finally lost patience. Thinking to get rid of him for a few minutes by a simple ruse, he said:

"Hurry, son, to the window and see the big parade!"

The little lad ran to the window and climbed upon a chair, while the father smiled at the success of his little lie.

The smile was still on his face when a tug at his coat and a "Hurry, papa—quick!" caused him to start toward the window.

"What is the matter?" he asked.

"Come and see the elephant in the parade!" said the boy.—Metropolitan Magazine.

How a Miser Selected an Heir.

As like affects like, so it is with misers, and gold will go where gold is. This is strikingly illustrated by the act of a celebrated Greek, one Dichoeus Dichoeus, a descendant of the Byzantine emperors. This man, by the exercise of extreme niggardliness managed to amass the sum of $50,000, an immense fortune in those days. Then came the question to whom should he leave it. One day a distant relative sent him a letter written upon a square inch of paper. This was sufficient. In the fitness of things the parsimonious correspondent became the miser's heir.
