A PLEA FOR CENTRAL

When the "girlie" at the "Central" says "busy," don't let yourself be worked into a fret and a sweat; don't tell her in language all flecked with fire, you think her a quite near approach to a liar—don't paw the carpet and don't chew the rag, nor roar as a bull when it sees a red flag, nor tell her in voicing that paints the air red, you'll have her tin canner ere the sun goes to bed, but murmur in sugary, marshmallow words, 'twill fall on her ear as the carol of birds, to please ring you up when the line is at rest, and she rises the party of whom you are in quest, and when she replies she'll do so, just hang the receiver up gently and not with a bang.

You scolding old fellow, if you had to bear but half the hello girl's burden of care; that temper of yours would explode with a boom; it would scatter oath fragments all over the room.

The girls are cussed at and growled at by men when trying to do just the best they can to keep service moving along without a hitch, when soreheads believe them asleep at the switch, and some times the harsh words which fall on their ears fill their throats full of lumps and their eyes full of tears.

Do unto "Central" as you would have others do unto a sister of yours were she one of the crew, and you'll find that your service far better will be than if by your crossness, you rattle them, see?—and all of them will pronounce you a dear, instead of an ill-tempered, sore-headed bear. Just give it a try, and if our words lack in truth, you can boot us to Brighton and back.—Ex.
