WOMAN'S LEAGUE AGAIN

Last week I had the privilege of dealing in a very scrappy way with some of the enemies of the American Women's League; and I want to say right here that we are proud of our enemies; they belong to a type for which we have no other use, than to fight them—even to the death!

But enough of the league's enemies—they are strong indeed, they are buttressed by enormous money interests, they have the use of government privileges, and will have—for the present! Let us dismiss them from our minds, we have better things to think of and can afford to wait. Our enemies are in a hurry! That Congressional investigation is pressing hard on their heels, while the hope of discrediting the league as well as its founder grows fainter and fainter!

I want as briefly as possible to say a few words about league friends. By these we may be judged. I quoted freely in my article last week, a Mr. Herbert Hungerford. This man is retained as special counsel on circulation matters for several leading periodical publishers—(Current Literature, Everybody's and others) and was sent to St. Louis to investigate the present situation of the league, authorized to report these conditions exactly as they are. He spent a fortnight at University City, interviewing most of the people at Headquarters, and reading—he says, "volumes of printed matter about the League." He sums up his investigation in these words. "After considering the situation from every possible viewpoint; after carefully weighing every matter which has a bearing upon the league I have come to the deliberate conclusion that if the league is not an ultimate success, its failure cannot be attributed either to Mr. Lewis or Mr. Williams" (the Controller of the Reorganization)—"if the league succeeds, and I have every confidence that it will win a great success, it will be due to the efficiency of its officers and the loyalty of its members."

Right there is our vulnerable point; if our women do not stand loyally to their guns in this fight—of course we shall fail! But how glad we are to recognize that in spite of well meant—but none the less regrettable—efforts of so many to undermine this foundation stone of our success, our women are holding their own, fighting where they can, and everywhere with but few exceptions standing firm!

In another place Mr. Hungerford asks the pertinent question: "Do you suppose, for one instant, that over one hundred periodical publishers would subscribe to the feasibility of the league plan if they were doubtful it could be carried out?" He closes his report by saying: "Personally I have every confidence in the league and its ultimate destiny. Coming as I did from New York to this beautiful little University City, I was absolutely amazed at the things that I found. I did not have any conception of what a great institution the league actually is. It is the greatest uplift institution I have ever known anything about, and I believe that it will go on to achieve greater things than have yet been dreamed of even by so prolific a dreamer as Mr. Lewis himself!"

By the courtesy of the editor accounts of other friends of the league and news of what it is actually accomplishing will appear in these columns from time to time.

ANNIE NEWELL.

The American Woman's League in Newberg feels greatly flattered that the Oregonian should deem it worthy of notice in an editorial Sunday. The mistake to which it takes exception, speaking of Mr. Lewis as mayor of St. Louis, Mo., instead of mayor of University City, Mo., was due to a hurried article. The mistake is gladly acknowledged. It does not in any wise affect the contents of the said article.

FAREWELL PARTY

Last Tuesday afternoon the Busy Bees of Shiloh W. R. C. No. 28 met at the cosy home of our sister, Mrs. Rebecca J. Allen who is going East on an extended trip, to visit her sister and friends. Always faithful in whatever duty she was asked to do she will be missed from our meetings.

The time was spent in social talk which was free from gossip. Refreshments were served.

CURIOS CLOCKS.

One of the Oldest in the World is in Wells Cathedral, England.

A curious astronomical clock is to be seen in Exeter cathedral. Below the works is a cabinet which when opened displays a miniature belfry with ringers, and the background is painted to represent a number of old buildings in Exeter. This was built by Lovelace, took thirty years to construct and rivals the famous clocks of Wimborne minister and Wells cathedral.

At Wimborne is an old clock that has in the center a globe which represents the earth and the sun and the moon, and the phases of the latter are variously depicted. The clock still goes, and the works, which are in a room above, cause a figure outside the tower to strike the quarters. This was the work of a Glastonbury monk early in the fourteenth century.

Wells has a wonderful clock, one of the oldest in the world, which dates from 1325. When it strikes the hour four knights on horseback go riding round, and the seated man kicks two small bells with his heels, as he has been doing every fifteen minutes for nigh on six centuries. This clock was the work of Peter Lightfoot, another monk of Glastonbury.

There is a clock at Windsor castle known as the globe clock. The globe is enameled in royal blue; a vertical bar shows the hours and a scythe the minutes. The Isaac Harbrecht clock is on view at the British museum, and two clocks well worth a visit may be seen at the Soane museum. The upper works of one of these revolve once in twelve months and require to be wound only once in every two years.

Interesting old clocks are to be found in private houses. One of these may be seen at Lutterworth. This is a long clock, which has an oval face, a hand that points to the days of the week, completing the round in seven days, another which shows the true dead beat and a third which points to the chimes and quarters. On the upper part of the clock are a small orchestra, which includes a flute, a cello and two violins, and a boy and girl and also three singers. The hours and the quarters are struck, every three hours a tune is played three times over, while the three figures that beat time and the boy and girl dance to the music.—London Queen.

Irrelevant.

An associate justice of the supreme court of Patagascar was sitting by a river.

"I wish to cross," said a traveler. "Would it be lawful to use this boat?"

"It would," was the reply. "It is my boat."

The traveler thanked him and rowed away, but the boat sank, and he was drowned.

"Heartless man!" said an indignant spectator. "Why did you not tell him that your boat had a hole in it?"

"The matter of the boat's condition," said the great jurist, "was not brought before me."—Success Magazine.

Ingrowing Toe Nails.

According to Dr. Lehmann, it is possible to cure ingrowing toe nails. Well made boots must be worn, and the nails should be properly cut, so that the corners always slightly project over the fleshy part of the toe. These precautions taken, the inflamed parts are then soaked with a diluted solution of ferric chloride, which is applied by means of cotton wool. It is enough to moisten the ailing part thoroughly with the liquid. The procedure is repeated every day, and after a short time the soft parts and proud flesh dry and become horny, while the nail softens.—London Globe.

The City Beautiful.

Today there is a growing demand that our cities should be not only sensibly planned, but beautiful, the Art Journal says. Simultaneous with this demand there is a revival of interest in the history of pageants. May not artists, by the exercise of a little cunning, see that these things are pushed to their logical conclusion and that they are followed by a call for the beautiful decoration of our public buildings, not only with sculpture, but with paintings of a historical character?

To Disappoint His Wife.

On May 20, 1736, the body of Samuel Baldwin, Esq., was, in compliance with a request in his will, buried, sans ceremony, in the sea at Lynton, Hants, England. His motive for this extraordinary mode and place of interment was to prevent his wife from "dancing on his grave," which she had frequently threatened to do in case she survived him.—"A Cabinet For the Curious."

The Greatest Man.

The greatest man is he who chooses the right with invincible resolution; who resists the sorest temptations from within and without; who bears the heaviest burdens cheerfully; who is calmest in storms and most fearless under menace and frowns; whose reliance on truth, on virtue, on God, is most unflinching. And is this a greatness which is apt to make a show or which is most likely to abound in conspicuous station?—William Ellery Channing.

The Surprise.

Laura—Oh, papa, hide behind the door! Charlie is coming, and he'll be so surprised at finding you here.

Charlie—Oh, I say, Laura, I've been down to the station after your blooming old dad and got left. The old idiot missed the train.

Laura's Father—Oh, no, I didn't. Tableau.

That Deering Binder

in harvest time—all the time. The successful farmer uses it and recommends it to his neighbors because he's used other makes and the DEERING beats them all. There's no doubt about the quality and the work it can do, and there's no doubt about the price being right. The question is, do you need a binder? If you do the answer is, yes, a DEERING. You can't afford to farm without it. Sold and fully warranted by
