A Drama of Real Life.

"Look here," the angry manager exclaimed, "what do you mean by turning in such a play as this to me? You let the villain marry the heroine and permit the hero to get the worst of it all around, although he is an exemplary young man who has always led a blameless life."
"Well, you said you wanted a play that was true to life, didn't you?"

CHINESE PIRATES.

The Bloody Battle That Wiped Out King Moy Sen's Crew.

Captain George B. Boyton's greatest fight was with old Moy Sen, the pirate king. The story is told in his autobiography, lately published: "The Chinamen rushed over the rail at us in a sulphur cloud. They threw themselves on the deck as though wounded in order to hamstring or disembowel, so we made sure every Chinaman was dead when he struck the deck. It was such a fight as one gets into only in years, perhaps only once in a lifetime. The butchery was dreadful, but the excitement of it sets one's blood ablaze. Our men became demons. As they shot and slashed they shouted and sang. A disarmed Chinaman seized me around the waist and dragged me in among his blood stained fellows, but we were so closely wedged together that they could not chop at me without striking each other, and they never thought of stabbing me. Norton and the mighty Lorensen, swinging an enormous Chinese sword which he had taken from one of his victims, came to my assistance, and in a twinkling I was free, with dead and maimed pirates piled up around me in a circle. I could feel sword cuts now and then, but they seemed like pin pricks. All of us were so covered with blood that there was no telling whether it came from our own wounds or those we had inflicted.

"That makes us even," I shouted to Lorensen, as I cut down a yellow devil who had crept up behind him while he was busy with those in front and had his knife raised to put him out of commission. A Chinaman who had lost his sword seized my empty pistol from its holster, pressed it over my heart and pulled the trigger. I let him go that far and then laughed at him as I backed away and cut his head half off. I saw Norton go down and fought my way to him, to find that he had only slipped in a red pool. He had been singing a loud requiem of profane abuse over those who had met his sword, and he resumed it where he had left off, hardly missing a note.

"We kept the pirates in front of us and steadily forced our way forward. Every time one of our own men fell it made us fight the harder. The Chiniques cut and slashed with all of their desperate savagery, but it was impossible for them to stand before the fury of our men, and though they outnumbered us four or five to one they finally began to give way. We followed them on to their own deck and piled them up on top of each other. Finally a lot of them took to the hold, and the rest, perhaps a hundred of them, jumped overboard.

"Those that foolishly fled to the hold we treated to a dose of their own medicine. We threw their stinkpots down among them until the air was thick with the poisonous smoke and closed the hatches. Some of them, gasping and blinded, tried to escape through the guarded gangways; the rest of them died in the hold. There was not a pirate left alive on the junk or on our own deck."

Her Father's Child.

The six-year-old daughter of a well known evangelistic preacher was playing on the sidewalk one day when a shabbily dressed and downcast man approached her father's house.

Halting at the foot of the steps, he looked at her, and in a weary voice—the voice of an unsuccessful book agent—he asked if her father might be found in his study.

"He isn't home," said the little girl, drawing close to him and gazing up into the tired face, "but he'll be home pretty soon. You go into the house, you poor, perishing soul, and mother'll look after you till he comes."—Youth's Companion.

Origin of Dunning.

During the reign of Henry VIII. there lived in Lincoln, England, a famous bailiff named Joe Dun. Joseph was very clever in the management of his business and so dextrous in annoying those who refused the payment of an account with which he had been intrusted that "to set Dun on him" or "to Dun him" became common advice to the owner of a bad debt. To this personage we owe what to not a few people is the most disagreeable word in the language.

A Striking Metaphor.

For a "striking metaphor" take Sydney Smith's when he saw a little girl stoop down and stroke the shell of a turtle.
"Why are you doing that, Belle?" he asked.
"To please the turtle."
"My child, you might as well stroke the dome of St. Paul's to please the dean and chapter."

DUELING IN AMERICA.

The First Fatal Meeting Was Upon Historic Boston Common.

The first fatal duel fought in what is now the United States was upon Boston Common, between Benjamin Woodbridge and Henry Phillips, on the evening of July 3, 1728. These young men had quarreled over cards at the Royal Exchange tavern in King street, now State street, and under the influence of drink had agreed to settle their differences with swords in the public grounds above named. They met at a little after 8 o'clock in the evening, and Woodbridge was mortally wounded and was found dead the following morning.

Both were gentlemen of good social position. Phillips was a brother of Gilling Phillips, who married Marie, the sister of Peter Faneuil, the builder of Boston's famous hall. Woodbridge had not completed his twentieth year. He was a young merchant who had recently been admitted to business as a partner with Jonathan Sewall, one of the most active merchants of the place. Henry Phillips, a young graduate of the college of Cambridge, was about four years older than Woodbridge, having at the time of this melancholy affair completed his twenty-third year. Woodbridge was the son of a gentleman of some distinction in the Barbados, one of the magistrates there, who had formerly been settled in the ministry as pastor in Groton, Conn.

The place of meeting was on the rising grounds of the Common, not far from the great elm, near where in the olden time a powder house stood. Small swords were used. No one but themselves participated. Woodbridge fell mortally wounded and died on the spot before the next morning. Phillips was slightly wounded and at midnight, by the aid of his brother Gilling and Peter Faneuil, of famous memory, made his escape to the Sheerness, a British man-of-war then lying in the harbor, and before the sun of the next morning had fully discovered to interested friends the miserable result of the unfortunate meeting he was on his way to France, where he died in less than a year of grief and a broken heart.

At the Wrong End.

"I been a-readin' all your eastern papers," commented Grizzly Gus, the three fingered terror of the Bad Lands, "and I been a-tryin' to keep up with the stories therein contained. But your sportin' sections gets me. I been a-readin' about these here fights you all has back east. Nine times out of ten the paper states that 'the fight ended in a draw.' That's what I can't savvy."

"Why not?" we asked. "When two men are equally matched why should not the fight end in a draw?"

"I guess you have diffrunt kind o' fights in yore country. Out here a 'fight begins with a draw.'"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Our Babel of Tongues.

The old and the young sometimes have difficulty in understanding each other's language. Geraldine, playing with her little companions on the sidewalk, succeeded in fooling one of them rather neatly.

Pleased with the infant crime, she dashed in to tell her grandmother, "Margaret got stung, grandma."

"What stung her, dear—a bee?" asked grandma mildly. Geraldine stared at her in blank surprise.

"What's a bee?" she asked, deeply perplexed. "Well, what do you mean by 'stung'?" inquired grandma in equal dismay, and at last accounts neither had been able to make the other comprehend what was meant.—New York Press.

The Victim.

"I hear poor Dobbs, the humorist, has gone to a sanitarium," Binks said.

"Yes," Higgins said. "He's worked himself into a state of nervous prostration that I fear is incurable."

"That's too bad," Binks said. "How did he come to do that?"

"Why, six weeks ago he got an answer to a riddle, one's a chauffeur and the other's a fur show, and he says he'll never be able to sleep until he finds the question it will make a good answer to," Higgins said.—Harper's Weekly.

He Had Read Romeo.

She was very literary, and he was not.

He had spent a harrowing evening discussing authors of whom he knew nothing and their books, of which he knew less.

Presently the maiden asked archly, "Of course you've read 'Romeo and Juliet'?"

He floundered helplessly for a moment and then, having a brilliant thought, blurted out happily: "I—I've read Romeo!"—Philadelphia Times.
