THE POULTRY YARD

Winter eggs and exercise go together.

Do not neglect the laying hen's exercise.

Judge not a hen by her beauty, but by the way she does her duty.

You may feed all the food your hens can possibly use, but if you are short of grit, the results will not be satisfactory.

It is not good for hens to dust in coal or wood ashes only, some folks claim, but we find that a few ashes lighten up the dirt.

Noon is a good time to supply the stock with some green stuff, such as cabbages or roots of any kind. The latter can be cut in half, and the hens will then pick them to pieces.

Have the floors of the houses well bedded with some light litter, so that the biddies will be induced to scratch, and thus warm up their bodies these cold, frosty mornings.

Drafts in the chickens' home are more dangerous when the fowls are quiet on the roost than when they are stirring around during the day; but a cold air current sweeping through the house is a bad thing at any time.

Poultry feeding has been much improved and simplified by the introduction of the hopper method. The old-fashioned way of preparing and mixing a wet mash is done away with, on account of its tedious and needless expense of time and labor. The hopper is filled with a variety of ground grains, and placed where it is accessible to the fowls at all times. With this arrangement the hens need never go to roost without sufficient food.

Presidential Vote Of Women.

It is estimated now that about 1,000,000 women will have the privilege of casting a vote for president next year in the six Western states which have the suffrage law. These votes are distributed substantially as follows: California, 500,000; Colorado, 160,000; Idaho, 48,000; Utah, 65,000; Washington, 125,000; Wyoming, 35,000.

"Maw, why can't we put up a hammock between these two trees? Ain't we part owners of this park?" "No, dear, it belongs to that fine-looking man in uniform with the white gloves on his hands."—Chicago Tribune.

"Life ain't nothin' but disappointment," groaned the Chronic Grumbler.

"Cheer up!" urged the Cheerful Idiot. "Didn't yer git £10 for puttin' yer picture in the paper as havin' bin cured o' all yer ills by Bunk's Pills?"

"Yes, I did. An' now all my relatifs are askin' me why I don't go to work, now th't I'm cured!"

It's a Pretty Good Plan to Forget It.

If you see a tall fellow ahead of a crowd
A leader of men, marching fearless and proud,
And you know of a tale whose mere telling aloud
Would cause his proud head in anguish bowed,
It's a pretty good plan to forget
it.

If you know of a skeleton hidden away
In a closet and guarded and kept from the day
In the dark and whose showing, whose sudden display,
Would cause grief and sorrow and lifelong dismay,
It's a pretty good plan to forget
it.

If you know of a thing that will darken
the joy
Of a man or a woman, a girl or a boy,
That will wipe out a smile or the least
way annoy
A fellow or any gladness to cloy,
It's a pretty good plan to forget
it.

Lincoln Kept His Promises.

It was like Lincoln to keep a promise when he made one.

While wine drinking was the fashion all about him, Mr. Lincoln never forgot his dead mother's request that he should close his lips to all strong drink. Once, when he was a member of Congress, a friend criticised him for his seeming rudeness in declining to test the rare wines provided by their host, urging as a reason for the refusal, "There is certainly no danger of a man of your years and habits becoming addicted to its use."

"I mean no disrespect, John," answered Mr. Lincoln, "but I promised my mother only a few days before she died that I would never use anything intoxicating as a beverage, and I consider that promise as binding today as it was the day I gave it."

"There is a great difference between a child surrounded by a rough class of drinkers and a man in the home of refinement," insisted the friend.

"But a promise is a promise forever, John, and when made to a mother is doubly binding," replied Lincoln.

He had great love for his mother and respect for her memory. He once said:

"All that I am, all that I hope to be, I owe to my angel mother."

Would that all mothers had such sons!—National Advocate.
