Water as a Nerve Food.

"If nervous people would only drink more water they would not be so nervous," remarked a trained nurse. Nearly every doctor will recommend a woman who is suffering from nervous prostration or nervous exhaustion to drink lots of water between meals, but many women who do not come under a doctor's care would feel better and look better if they would drink, say, a quart of water in the course of the day. Water seems to be a nerve food, like good butter. It has a distinctly soothing effect when sipped gradually, as one can test for herself. Water drunk slowly and gradually has somewhat the same quieting effect as deep breathing.

He Rattled the Bones.

"My, but I had an embarrassing minute last night," said a stenographer employed in a Broadway theatrical office yesterday. "A friend of mine called. He's awfully nice, but he's terribly thin. We were sitting in the parlor talking when the subject of minstrels came up. 'I'd like to be an end man in a minstrel show,' he said. 'Can you rattle those bones?' I asked. 'Then he embarrassed me fearfully. He stood up and shook his arms. 'Sure,' he said. 'See there?'—New York Telegraph.

The Weight of a Trifle.

In the journal of the celebrated English preacher Frederick Robertson occurs the following singular passage: "If I had not known a certain person I never should have given up soldiering to become a minister; if I had not met a certain lady I never should have known that person; if my dog had not disturbed that lady's invalid child at night I never should have met her. It is true, then, that if my dog had not barked on that particular night I should now be in the dragoons or fertilizing the soil of India."

Searching For Mahogany.

Mahogany trees do not grow in clusters, but are scattered throughout the forests and hidden in a dense growth of underbrush, vines and creepers. It requires a skillful and experienced woodsman to find them. He seeks the highest ground in a forest, climbs to the top of the tallest tree and surveys the surrounding country. The mahogany has a peculiar foliage, and his practiced eye soon detects the trees within sight.

REIGN OF THE LEECH.

When Bloodletting Was a Popular Remedy For Many Diseases.

One of the common remedies of a generation or so ago for epilepsy, delirium or other ailments accompanied with a rush of blood to the head was to bleed the patient. This treatment was given on the theory that the excess of blood in the head would be relieved if sufficient blood were taken from other parts of the body. A favorite method of extracting the blood was by the use of leeches. The leech is a carnivorous or bloodsucking worm with a surprising capacity for blood. At each end of the body there is a sucker, so a well developed leech worked rapidly on the patient overburdened with blood. The leech never was fastidious about the kind of blood he consumed. It thrived as well upon the blood of the old family horse as upon any other kind. When leeches were needed for bleeding purposes a horse was usually driven into the water where the leeches lived and kept there until some of them fastened themselves upon the horse. These worms had a commercial value in Europe until a comparatively recent date, and they were fed regularly by their owners, who would drive horses and cattle into the water and make them stay there for a certain period every day while the leeches dined. So popular and prevalent was the bleeding cure that every slight indisposition was attributed to too much blood, and it was not uncommon for a farmer who was not too ill to work, although he "felt a little under the weather," to start to the fields in the morning with a leech working on him. Neither the leech nor the farmer was restricted to union hours. The leech dined until he was full, when he would drop to the ground, while the farmer was happy in the belief that he was being cured of his high tide of blood in the most approved manner. Bleeding of patients was frequently accomplished through an operation with a knife, and there are cases recorded in which the flow of blood so weakened the patient that death resulted.—Kansas City Star.

Storms of Old England.

In the year 944 in London alone 1,500 houses were blown down; in October, 1091, a great number of churches and 500 houses were destroyed; in 1235 it thundered for fifteen days consecutively. The dreadful night during which Cromwell's spirit passed has formed a theme for poet and partisan. And the great storm that "o'er pale Britannia passed" in November, 1703, the most terrible in British annals, also has its enduring record in poetry. It did damage in London to the amount of $3,000,000. Over 8,000 people were drowned in floods in various parts of the country; twelve men-of-war, with over 1,800 men on board, went down in sight of land, and the Eddystone lighthouse, along with Winstanley, its inventor, was swept away.

Gotham.

Gotham, New York's alias, was originally applied to the Manhattan town in derision, doubtless because of some foolishness on the part of its people. "The Merry Tales of the Mad Men of Gotham" was a collection of satirical tales written in the fifteenth century by one Andrew Borde, a Carthusian monk. Gotham was a village near Nottingham, and the fame of the "Wise Men of Gotham" soon traveled the world over. Doubtless Henry VIII. imagined that Borde was taking a sly fling at him, for he imprisoned the hapless writer in the Tower, where only death released him.

Prompted the Prince.

In Lord Broughton's reminiscences there is a description of Queen Victoria's wedding, the writer having been one of the guests. "Her majesty," he said, "looked handsome, but pale, and the orange blossoms on her head shook violently. But she performed her part with her usual propriety and presence of mind and prompted Prince Albert during the reading of the lessons more than once. She once beckoned to him to approach nearer when he put the ring on her finger and pointed to the finger on which the ring was to be put."

A Simple Liniment.

A simple liniment that is good for a strained back after a siege of housework calls for four tablespoonfuls of strong ammonia, four tablespoonfuls of alcohol, two large tablespoonfuls of salt and about a quart of rainwater. Put these ingredients into a bottle and shake well. As soon as the salt is dissolved it is ready for use. When needed rub the back with the liniment and continue the rubbing until the surface is warm with the friction.—New York Tribune.
