

VISITING WASHAKIE.

An incident of the Boyhood Days of "Fighting Bob" Evans.

Little Breeches, the hero of John Hay's verses, was not the first to bear the name. The late Admiral Robley D. Evans in his book, "A Sailor's Log," says that it was bestowed on him in the course of a journey across the plains just before the outbreak of the civil war.

Young Evans had been appointed to Annapolis by the delegate from Utah, although he was a native of Virginia, and he had to journey to Salt Lake City in order to qualify himself for his cadetship by residence in the new territory.

Washakie, a Snake Indian chief, met the party of which Evans was a member at the ford of the Green river. He took a great fancy to the young Virginian, then hardly fourteen years old, and instantly named him Little Breeches.

"At the request of Washakie," the narrative proceeds, "I was allowed to go on a ten days' visit to his camp. It was agreed that if the party had to move before my return my belongings should be left at the ferry and that I should finish the journey with some other party.

"If it had not been for my fear of treachery I should have enjoyed my experience very much. Washakie was six feet tall—the finest looking Indian I ever saw—and I learned afterward that he had always been friendly to the whites and had served them on many occasions.

"The tribe numbered about a thousand persons, and when we camped their dogs and ponies seemed to cover the country for miles around. The ponies were so well trained that a warrior could step from his wigwam and whistle or call his own pony from the drove feeding on the prairie some distance away.

"During the day we marched or hunted, and at night I was expected to wrestle with the Indian lads of my own age, which always amused the chief. I could throw them, as a rule, but their hides were so well greased I could never hold them down.

"One incident I remember vividly. We were camped near a creek where willows grew plentifully, and I cut and made a willow whistle. When I walked in among the warriors and blew a sharp blast on my whistle there was a great scattering and seizing of arms. Nobody had ever seen such a thing, and for two days I was kept busy whistling out whistles. It was a strange sight to see these grown men—and women, too—walking about solemnly tooting on willow whistles.

"Washakie brought me back to the ferry on time, which surprised some of the party, who had thought me gone for good. On the way he talked with me about the advantages that would come if I would let him adopt me—the ponies I should own and the chance of marrying one of his own daughters some day. But Indian life had less charm for me the more I saw of it. I thanked him as best I could, but I was glad when the river and several miles of prairie lay between me and my Snake friends."

They Made No Noise.

A young colored woman called the other day on a north side woman who is known as an easy giver to almost every benevolence or charity that "comes up the pike," as her husband expresses it. The caller asked a donation for one of the colored churches.

"Why," said the lady of the house, "I've already done something for your church. I made my contribution to Susie. I did not know you were collecting."

"Well," said the colored woman, "it's jes' dis-a-way. I belongs to the Gum Shoe sasiety, an' we don't make any noise 'bout our collecting."—Indianapolis News.

Good Business.

In his early days, when he was beginning to be recognized as one of the most brilliant of the "Glasgow school" of painters, John Lavery sold a picture to a famous Scotch collector.

"I'm glad," said the latter, "to be able to give some encouragement to a fellow countryman."

Mr. Lavery said nothing at the time, but later he wrote to the purchaser as follows:

Dear Sir—I am an Irishman, but I have enough Scottish blood in me to have concealed the fact until I had cashed your check.

Not the Same.

Yeast—Thought you said your wife took a great interest in forestry?

Crimsonbeak—I never said anything of the kind.

"Why, you told me the other day that she was strong for conservation."

"No, I didn't. What I said was that she was strong for conversation."—Yonkers Statesman.

Piano Tone.

Can the tone of pianos be improved after they are tuned? In the majority of cases, yes, especially is this true of pianos generally retailed under $400 and likewise is it true of all pianos after some years of use. Are you interested, if so when you want your piano tuned again, call on E. U. Will, the piano tuner who is not catering to any music houses to work up sales. He works for you if you engage him and will tell you all about it, it is too expensive to explain it through advertising. Read this letter, I have many similar references.

Newberg, Or., Oct. 11, 1911
E. U. Will, Portland, Or.

Dear Sir: I will say the work you did on our piano in tuning and "tone regulating" is entirely satisfactory and would not have it changed as before for $25. It is like a new piano and we want you to look after our piano as long as we live here.

Truly, L. E. Arney.

Not one tuner in twenty will give you as good service for various reasons, reasons that probably have not occurred to you. The next time call Mr. Will. Portland address, 221 Adams street.

MERELY AN EYE WASH.

The Chemical View of Tears Differs From the Poetical View.

Tears have their functional duty to accomplish, like every other fluid of the body, and the lachrymal gland is not placed behind the eye simply to fill space or to give expression to emotion.

The chemical properties of tears consist of phosphate of lime and soda, making them very salty, but never bitter. Their action on the eye is very beneficial, and here consists their prescribed duty of the body, washing thoroughly that sensitive organ, which allows no foreign fluid to do the same work. Nothing cleanses the eye like a good salty shower bath, and medical art has followed nature's law in this respect, advocating the invigorating solution for any distressed condition of the optics. Tears do not weaken the sight, but improve it. They act as a tonic on the muscular vision, keeping the eye soft and limpid, and it will be noticed that women in whose eyes sympathetic tears gather quickly have brighter, tenderer orbs than others. When the pupils are hard and cold the world attributes it to one's disposition, which is a mere figure of speech implying the lack of balmy tears that are to the cornea what salve is to the skin or nourishment to the blood.

The reason some women weep more easily than others and all more readily than the sterner sex has not its difference in the strength of the tear gland, but in the possession of a more delicate nerve system. The nerve fibers about the glands vibrate more easily, causing a downpour from the watery sac. Men are not nearly so sensitive to emotion. Their sympathetic nature—that term is used in a medical sense—is less developed, and the eye gland is therefore protected from shocks. Consequently a man should thank the formation of his nerve nature when he contemptuously scorns tears as a woman's practice. Between man and monkey there is this essential difference of tears—an ape cannot weep, not so much because its emotional powers are undeveloped as the fact that the lachrymal gland was omitted in his optical makeup.—Exchange.

Holidays.

The joys of our holidays—who can measure them? The present pleasure of the days themselves is not the only nor the chief enjoyment. The schoolboy's anticipation of the sports of vacation is to be added to the pleasure of the vacation itself. And then the memory of it after it is past—how much more this memory adds to the sum total of the enjoyment which the vacation brings! The schoolboy remembers the afternoons at the swimming pool, the happy days in the woods or by the stream long after he has forgotten the irksome duties of school or farm. The same boy, older grown, remembers the pleasure the victories of the college athletic field long after he has forgotten how to conjugate useless Greek verbs, and the same man in later life, if he is a sportsman, recalls more often and with more satisfaction the day when he caught his record breaking salmon or shot his first moose than he does the day when he was elected to office or when he cleared up a few thousands in a stock transaction.—Samuel Merrill in Forest and Stream.

Rainbow Tinted Fishes.

The remarkable brilliancy of color in the fish living about the coral reefs in tropical regions has been often noticed. Brilliant blue with fins and tail of bright yellow, vivid crimson shading off into a more subdued hue, bright green spotted and banded with red, green with long parallel stripes of blue and red, green marked with red above and bright blue below—such are some of the colors displayed by the fish of the Great Barrier reef of Australia. In order to explain such brilliant hues on the principles of natural selection they have been described as "warning colors." The fish are thought to be nauseous or poisonous and to proclaim this by their bright colors. As regards those of the Australian coral reef, however, many of them are said to be excellent eating.

What He Wanted.

The old man turned from his desk as his son-in-law entered the office.

"Well, what is it now?" he asked. "I—er—have been thinking," answered the new member of the family, "that you ought to give me a pension."

"A pension!" exclaimed the old man. "What in thunder do you mean, sir?"

"Well, it's like this," explained the other. "Ever since I did your daughter the honor to marry her I have been dependent on you for support, and I want to be independent. See!"—Chicago News.

His Depressor.

He was handsome, young, talented. He had apparently everything one could wish for as a start in life, but every time he came into a room where there were mirrors he absorbed himself in contemplation of the back of his head.

"That spot is getting thinner and thinner," he complained when he called on the woman and sat down after looking at it in all the mirrors in her flat. "Don't make any difference what I do with it, it keeps on getting larger. I've tried everything, rubbing it with kerosene, with hair tonics; can't do a thing with it."

"It's just as well," she consoled him. "If you didn't have that little bald spot to keep you humiliated there'd be no associating with you."—New York Press.

Startling Equine Sagacity.

A startling story of equine sagacity comes from the provinces. A horse was standing in the shafts of a carriage just outside the local theater. It had a weary look, as of one that desired repose. Suddenly it brightened up, and before it could be stopped it made a dash for the box office. The reason for this unexpected behavior gave rise to much discussion till at last one of the crowd, more observant than the others, pointed out that the legend "To the Stalls" was written in large letters over the box office window.—London Globe.

Biblical.

An Alabama man tells of an old darky in Birmingham who became possessed of a seedy and forlorn looking dog, to which he promptly assigned the name Moreover.

"Jefferson," the aged negro was asked, "how did you hit upon such a name as Moreover for the dog?"

"I gits it outen de Bible," said the darky.

"The Bible?"

"Sure, sah. Doan' yo' 'member where it says, 'When Lazarus lay at de rich man's gate Moreover, de dog, come an' lick his sores?'"—Harper's Weekly.
