"Skookum Salmon."

Uncle Ben Brown was one of the earliest settlers in Oregon. He was an intelligent man with a keen sense of humor, and his tales of pioneer days always drew an interested audience. This story is one of the most popular:

There used to be lots of Indians on the Rogue River when I came here. And they sometimes did mighty queer things. There is a place above Gold Hill called the Dardanelles, where the river rushes between steep rocks, with a big quiet pool below. Here miners and others packing between California and Oregon in the early days used to cross. Indians would often hang round there and make a little money ferrying the packers across the river.

I was camped at the Dardanelles in '53, and one evening a packer came along, going south. An Indian was there with his canoe. He'd been sitting on a stone for an hour or more without moving, and watching the big salmon that kept shooting out of the pool, upbending like a stick of cord-wood, and then plunging back into the water. No doubt he was thinking how good a steak off one of those salmon would taste. The packer soon made a bargain with the Indian to take him over.

The Indian piled most of the pack in the front of the canoe, and took his seat in the middle. The white man sat behind, and towed his horse at the end of a lariat. The packer had an old, fat-barreled, sawed-off musket, called a "yauger," that the Indian laid across the pack in front of him. Half-way across he stopped paddling, and squinted down into the water. He saw a monster salmon right under the canoe. Grunting "Skookum salmon!" he dropped the paddle, and grabbing up the yauger, rammed it into the water up to the locks, took aim, and discharged it.

I guess he didn't know that he couldn't blow a hole in the Rogue River with a gun without startling results. The canoe turned over like a flash. Pieces of the old yauger went twenty feet into the air. The Indian and the white man both disappeared. Presently the packer came up and began to swim round, trying to collect his goods, sputtering, and making severely critical remarks about Indians in general.

The Indian didn't come up for some time. When he did, it was near the foot of the pool. His face was covered with blood. In two plunges, he made shore on the other side at the foot of the rapids, rushed up the bank, and stopped a moment to brush the wet hair hurriedly out of his eyes. Then with one dazed look in my direction, he exclaimed, "Hoosh, hoosh!" and dived into the brush. He must have thought that the salmon or the gun or the river was bewitched, for I never saw him again on Rogue River. So far as I know, the salmon was uninjured.—The Youth's Companion.

Not His Proper Play.

"Paid taxes on your house and lot yet?"
"Yes, and there's a mistake of several dollars in the amount."
"Why don't you make a kick about it?"
"Kick! Huh! The mistake is in my favor."
"How do you know there's a mistake?"
"Because this is the first time in six years that the tax hasn't been increased."

"What's the trouble?"
"He's sent me vegetable seeds for my flower garden."—Detroit Free Press.

"What's the matter here?" asked a stranger of a small boy, as he noticed a large wedding party coming out of a church on Fifth avenue.

"Nawthin' but the tied goin' out."

"Jones caught the hay fever from dancing with a grass widow."

Brown—I hear that they use all sorts of materials in the manufacture of illuminating gas, nowadays.

Jones—True. They even make light of the consumer's complaints.

Teacher of Drawing Class—"Willie, tell me how you would make a malted cross."

Willie—"Step on his tail, mum."

He—Did you ever see anything at so-called bargain sales that was really cheap?

She—Yes; the look on the man's face who accompanied his wife to one of them.

An old lady, being told that a certain lawyer "was lying at the point of death," exclaimed: "My gracious! Won't even death stop that lying?"

"One day in the dining-car, the boy across the aisle got to laughing so, he couldn't stop. I said to his mother, 'that boy needs a spanking.' She said, 'Well, I don't believe in spanking a boy on a full stomach.' I said, 'Neither do I. Turn him over—'"
