Wiley gives the information that the right-of-way men for the Oregon Electric have been circulating between Rex and Sherwood during the week, interviewing those who own land over which the survey for the road runs. At Rex the line runs through the school grounds and also the grounds of the Friends church, practically absorbing both. They have made a proposition to buy new grounds for both the school and the church, and remove the buildings and grade the grounds down in good shape. Owing to the deep cut that must be made in order to get the desired grade over the hill, new arrangements must be made for the wagon road and it is proposed to make two concrete archways over the railroad track, one for the road that comes in from the south to the Southern Pacific station and the other for the Portland road. ONCE A NEWSPAPER MAN

(Gideon Cobb in Ore. City Courier.)

There's an old print-shop maxim, which in substance says, "Once a newspaper man—always a newspaper man." A long time ago, the writer kicked himself loose from the harness, obtained a decree of absolute divorce from the newspaper game, started life anew on a "back to the soil" acre tract proposition, and has enjoyed this mild Oregon atmosphere ever since—under the hallucination that his "nose for news" and others symptoms of the dreaded malady which is superinduced from exhaling the deadly fumes from the ink barrel—had all been purged from his system. Temptation proved too strong the other day when that old-time troublesome nose pointed to some of the eighth grade examination answers, which had been handed in by Clackamas county schoolchildren. Like one who has taken the Keely cure and afterwards falls from grace, the old craving, the old appetite returned, and the writer jotted down some of the answers and here they are as handed in by Clackamas' coming generation:

Two very amusing replies were given in answer to the question, "Who is Booker T. Washington?" One youngster who evidently looks at the newspapers, answered: "Booker T. Washington is a man who was recently left a large sum of money by John Jacob Astor." The other lad, in addition to the main question, gives some additional information in saying "Booker T. Washington was the father of George Washington, who in turn was the father of his country."

The question "Define habeas corpus" was a sure enough stumbling for little Willie evidently, for he simply wrote: "Habeas corpus means: You take the body and I'll take the soul." Another answer by a youngster with aspirations toward a coroner's job, simply wrote: "To take the corpse." The spiritual reply of Willie shows that his future is carved out for him as a minister of the gospel.

As to the terms of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, there were many and various conjectures. "Do unto others as you would be done by," suggested a pious little fellow. "The terms of this bill was two years," wrote another with all the dignity of a police judge giving a "30-day sentence to a wayward hobo. "One thousand" was the estimated population of Clackamas county, presented by a little girl.

These and many others caught the eye of the expencil pusher and were too good to go unpublished.

COMMITTEE INVESTIGATIONS

Finds Bitulithic in Favor With Property Owners.

The following extract is from the report of the paving committee at Leavenworth, Washington:

"At Portland, Oregon, the committee spent much time in investigating the merits of bitulithic, wood block, stone block, concrete, asphaltic brick and Hassam paving. There appeared to be much more bitulithic than any other character of paving in use. The committee visited the plant of the Warren Paving Co., in Portland, where an expert chemist and road construction expert explained the methods employed by the company in putting down paving. The committee also saw and inspected bitulithic paving under construction from the time the first course of rock is put down, afterwards covered with bitumen, which was thoroughly rolled and then covered with a mixture of ninety per cent fine crushed stone and ten per cent bitumen, then again rolled and covered with a thin coating of pure bitumen and sand, or asphalt, which made the paving of which samples were shown in this club room by an agent of the Warren Paving Co. "Members of the committee talked with property owners fronting on streets paved with bitulithic paving, with employees of the water department who were employed in making openings in this and other character of paving for the purpose of making water and sewer connections and were told that the bitulithic was among the best and most satisfactory paving in use in the city."

The mother of a three-year-old boy who was given to running away, adopted the plan of tying him to one of the piazza pillars with a long rope. He was very fond of having his mother sing to him, and one night when she was singing the old song, "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" the child suddenly burst into tears and asked, "Why didn't his mudder tie him?"—Harper's.
