BRITAIN'S CROWN JEWELS.

There is Little Danger These Days of Them Being Stolen.

The British crown jewels are guarded in the Tower of London. At great cost the section of the tower wherein these famous gems are kept has been made impregnable against all robbers.

At a given signal all the gates and doors of the tower would be instantly closed and that by the simple pressing of a button. Buttons are placed in the governor's room at Scotland Yard and at other points known only to a few responsible officers. Even the massive gates of the middle tower, which weigh several tons, may be closed by electrical process in order that no one within the tower may pass out. At the same time there would ring an alarm bell to warn the warders, police and soldiers to prepare themselves for any emergency.

In other days several attempts were made to steal the crown jewels. A Colonel Blood actually succeeded in getting possession for a time of the crown and scepter of the United Kingdom. This he did by overpowering and binding the keeper. The latter, however, contrived to raise an alarm and, help arriving from an unexpected quarter, Blood was pursued and overtaken, but not before he had got clear of the precincts of the building, with his precious booty.

It was this attempt that led to the adoption of an elaborate series of precautions to guard the treasure. There is a special military guard of picked men, who give and receive a countersign that is changed every four hours. In addition, aside from the electric alarm system mentioned above, there is a rigid system of visiting patrols, etc.

The most valuable of the jewels are secured by a massive iron grating, the keys of which are held by the lord chamberlain, out of whose custody they are supposed never to pass. Curiously enough, this apparent superfluity of caution once nearly resulted in the destruction of the entire collection by the great fire that threatened the tower in 1841. The flames had attacked the jewel house itself before the keeper succeeded, with the aid of a crowbar, in forcing an admission to the house, so he might hand out the jewels to the firemen and police in waiting.—New York Press.

Laocion.

As Napoleon was one day passing in review of some of his troops he came in front of an old and faithful officer, who, perhaps from want of brilliancy on the man's part, had never been advanced beyond the grade of captain, though he was well enough known to the emperor. The emperor was passing at a slow trot. As he came directly in front of the old captain the officer saluted and said loudly, but without any apparent movement of the muscles of the face:

"Fifteen campaigns, private, captain!"

And the emperor, without turning his head or slackening his pace, said:

"Colonel, brigadier, baron!" Then he was gone. There had, indeed, been no time for a word more than had been passed, but these had sufficed for the captain to communicate a long story and a reproachful complaint and for the emperor to set matters right with a military and social promotion.

A Mystery of the Sea.

There are a host of vessels which have not been heard of since they sailed, but one of the most marvelous stories concerns the Marie Celeste, a French passenger sailing ship. She was sighted by the British ship Highlander on Oct. 4, 1875, and in reply to the signals gave the usual answer of "All's well." Two days later when sighted she did not reply. She was boarded, but not a living or dead person was found on board. Everything was in perfect order, luncheon was laid in the saloon, the personal belongings of the passengers and crew were intact, and a bottle of medicine was found upright on the captain's locker. The log had been kept down to the previous day, but there was no entry to account for the mysterious disappearance of all on board. Nothing was heard afterward of any of the passengers and crew.

The Superior Attraction.

One of the two women who sat near the front of the car had been to the theater the night before to see a certain beautiful actress.

"How does she hold her age?" eagerly asked the one who had not been.

"Well, to tell you the truth, Mamie, she wore such a lovely pink dress that I couldn't take my eyes off it the whole time she was on the stage, so I never thought of looking at her face to see whether she held her age or not. I should say she did, though."—New York Press.
