HOW DOLLS ARE MADE.

The Many Processes in Use in the German Factories.

The making of the composition dolls as seen in the German factories is an interesting process, even though some of the rooms are hot, steamy places where one does not care to stay a long time. First there is the kneading room, where a big mixing trough is set up, and in this all sorts of ragbag material are to be found—old gloves, rags, bits of cardboard, etc., and gum tragacanth. This mixture is kneaded by hand to the consistency of a paste, heated and carried into the mold room. There it is dipped up by women and poured into the patterns which are set up in rows.

The molds are put away until they are cold enough to handle, when a workman by a dextrous movement of his hands separates the leaden sides, and the doll's head is revealed. The polisher then trims off the ragged seams and sends the heads to another room, where the holes for the eyes are cut out. This is an extremely delicate task, as all the sockets must be of uniform size. The work is done by hand, a long, sharp knife being used.

The heads are next painted, waxed or glazed, depending upon the character of the material from which they are made. The arms, legs and hands are molded in the same manner as the heads—a special machine being used for stamping out the hands. These parts are painted in flesh color, while the heads must have rosy cheeks, red lips and dark or light eyebrows, as the color of the eyes used may require. Putting in the eyes is a simple operation, unless the eyes are to open and shut, in which case the balancing of the lead becomes a matter of some skill.

Germany possesses a secret formula for the enamel used on the faces, and the dainty, natural flesh tint of the better grade of dolls is the result of this process. The making of the eyes is a dreary task, for it must be done away from the sunlight, and in some parts of Germany the eye makers work in the cellars. It is said that one town supplies three-fourths of all the dolls' eyes used. Violet is the most difficult color to mix, and few violet eyed dolls are found.

The wig is the final touch, and this is usually made of real hair imported from China. The hair used for blond dolls is the same, except that the color is extracted.—Mrs. C. R. Miller in Leslie's.

His Hard Luck.

"What has happened to me?" asked the patient when he had recovered from the effects of the ether.

"You were in a trolley car accident," said the nurse, "and it has been found necessary to amputate your right hand."

He sank back on the pillow, sobbing aloud.

"Cheer up," said the nurse, patting him on the head, "you'll soon learn to get along all right with your left hand."

"Oh, it wasn't the loss of the hand itself that I was thinking of," sighed the victim. "But on the forefinger was a string that my wife tied around it to remind me to get something for her this morning. And now I'll never be able to remember what it was."—Cleveland Leader.

A Bargain.

Some years ago Mr. Rudyard Kipling sold a book to a firm of publishers in London for a sum that worked out at the rate of a shilling a word—a fact which was very much advertised. A Fleet street humorist, for the fun of the thing, wrote to the author saying that as wisdom seemed to be quoted at retail prices he would like one word, for which he inclosed a shilling postal order. The reply came in due course. Mr. Kipling had kept the shilling postal order and written on a large sheet of paper the word, "Thanks!"

A French Joke.

Here is a French joke that is rather English in character: The Marquis de Favieres, notorious for his impecuniosity, called on a man of means named Barnard and said: "Monsieur, I am going to astonish you. I am the Marquis de Favieres. I do not know you, and I come to borrow 500 louis."

"Monsieur," Barnard replied, "I am going to astonish you much more. I know you, and I am going to lend them."

Various Kinds of Manna.

It is supposed that the manna of the Israelites was a saccharine exudation of a species of tamarisk, the sap of which was set flowing by an insect. Several trees yielded manna, as the flowering ash of Sicily and the eucalyptus of Australia. In India, says the Christian Herald, a sweet exudation comes from the bamboo, and a similar substance is obtained from the sugar pine and common reed of our own country.

ROMANCE OF RHODESIA.

Story of the Missionary, the Explorer and the Prospector.

The story of the taking and making of Rhodesia forms one of the most picturesque and thrilling chapters in the history of England's colonial expansion. About the time that the nineteenth century had reached its turning point a strange tale, passing by word of mouth from native kraal to native kraal, came at last to the ears of a Scotch worker in the mission field of Bechuana-land. It was a tale of a waterfall somewhere in the jungles of the distant north—a waterfall so mighty, declared the natives, that the spray from it looked like a storm cloud on the horizon, and the thunder of its waters could be heard four days' trek away.

So the missionary, wearied with the tedium of proselyting amid a peaceful people and restless with the curiosity of the born explorer, set out on a long and lonely march to the northward, through a country which no white man's eyes had ever seen. It took him three years to reach the falls for which he started, but when at last he stood upon the brink of the canyon and looked down upon the waters of the Zambesi as they hurtled over 400 feet of sheer cliff, he was so awed by their majesty and their beauty that he named them after Victoria, the young English queen. Before he left the missionary explorer carved his name on the trunk of a tree, where it can be seen today; the name is David Livingstone.

For a quarter of a century the regions adjacent to the Zambesi were disturbed only by migratory bands of natives and marauding animals. Then Stanley came with his mile long caravan of porters, halting long enough to explore and map the region, on his historic march from coast to coast.

In the middle of the eighties a bulky thickset, shabbily clad prospector, trekking through the country with a single wagon, found that for which he was seeking—gold. He saw, too, that its verdure clad prairies would support many cattle and that its virgin soil was adapted for many kinds of crops; that it was, in short, a white man's country. Unarmed and unaccompanied, he penetrated to the kraal of Lobengula, the chief of the warlike Matabele, who occupied the region, and induced him to sign a treaty placing his country under British protection.

The price paid him was £100 a month and a thousand antiquated rifles—cheap enough, surely, for a territory three times the size of Texas and as rich in natural resources as California. A year later the British South Africa company, a corporation capitalized at £6,000,000, under a contract granted by the imperial government, began the work of exploiting the concession, naming it, properly enough, after Cecil John Rhodes, the lone prospector, who, with the vision of a prophet, had foreseen its possibilities and by whose unaided efforts it had been obtained.

Such was the first step in Rhodes' policy of British expansion northward, a policy so successful that in his own lifetime he saw the frontiers of British Africa pushed from the Orange river to the Nile.—E. Alexander Powell, F. R. G. S., in Scribner's.

The Word "Chores."

The word "chore," generally used in the plural, is not slang, but an English word of highly respectable lineage. In this form it is found only in America, in England the spelling and pronunciation being "char," though this is rarely used except in combination with "woman"—"charwoman." But in some of the provincial dialects, that of Cornwall for example, the word "chores" is used precisely as we use "chores." All these forms come down to us from the Anglo-Saxon word "cer" or "cerran," to turn over.

Misplaced Boast.

"Pretty nice land around here," said the stranger as his dusty rig stopped in front of the gate. "Certainly is," replied the eager farmer. "Finest in the state." "I reckon it is too high priced for a poor man," sighed the stranger. "Well," replied the farmer, "it is worth every cent of $1,200 an acre. That's the way I value it. Were you thinking of buying?" "No," replied the stranger as he jotted something into a book. "I'm the new county assessor."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

His Choice of Charity.

"Economy is all very well," said a speaker, "but some of the latter day, scientific management economy you hear about reminds you of the skindint millionaire whose only charity was foreign missions." "You see," the man explained, "I choose foreign missions because I want to make my money go as far as possible."—Washington Post.
