"WHAT ARE ATTORNEYS FOR?"

It has always seemed to me that a lawyer as a rightful interpreter of the laws that were made to govern a people was in a position to serve his country with distinction and in times past I plead guilty to having done my part toward sending them to the legislature by the means of my one little humble vote, thereby believing that in so doing I was performing my patriotic duty; but the more I have been involved in the intricacies of the law, as seen in the lower courts, the more the conviction comes that our laws were made by trouble brewers in order to line their pockets, and the people have paid and will continue to pay dearly for putting them in a position to so serve them.

It is with satisfaction though that we are beginning to see through the clouds that envelop a "blind justice" and note a little ray of hope that the time may come that the balances of equality which she holds may weigh out to the people, right because it is right, and not because one side happens to have the money or influence to work the scales in their favor.

This ray of hope that has at last come, was in the action of the last circuit court in fining the present city attorney $250 for advice given to his client and thereby holding him responsible for his actions, and I for one feel proud of the jury that allowed it and it has paved the way for other cases where by the actions of would-be-interpreters of the law innocent parties in order to get justice in the courts, have lost the savings of a life-time of hard labor in order to defend their rights. This same attorney though pays tribute to a fellow attorney, who was employed by Mr. Skelton in his suit for his rights by saying that Sargent has not treated Skelton right and why? He has been paid hard earned money by Mr. Skelton to defend his rights, also he has accepted money from the owners of this creek as a retainer's fee, and has had two years to make his appeal and why has it not been done?

Is there any justice in the supreme court of Oregon to deprive Mr. Skelton a hearing before that court and also the supreme court of our United States where he intends to appeal it when it has run the course of our state courts? We cannot help, but believe that our courts were established for justice in the first place and that right will prevail in the end to those whose endurance and money will hold out. In going back to the trial in the lower court, your distinguished "water" advocate McCain in addressing the jury admonished them that the riparian owners below had just as much right to this water as Mr. Skelton had. Also Chapin in a talk with Mrs. Ridge way on being asked by her for him to put himself in her place and asked what he would do, replied, he would "fight it to a finish." What did he mean by this? Was it that the finish meant he would allow himself to be robbed of all the rights vouchsafed to every individual under the constitution, verily we believe not. There are many other things connected with this case that was not brought out in the courts before and when it comes again, will prove not only of interest to this little neighborhood, but to the state as well.

 Respectfully,
 Howard Walton.

PULLMAN, WASHINGTON, PLANS MANY STREET IMPROVEMENTS

Pullman has awarded the contract of laying 10 blocks of paving on College Hill and 13 blocks on State Street to Warren Construction Company.

In choosing bitulithic paving, Pullman people have followed the example set by most other cities and towns in the Northwest. Bitulithic paving commends itself to the man who meets paving bills for two reasons—economy and beauty, included among which is service.

Streets paved with bitulithic insure a future free from repair bills, while the handsome bitulithic streets add much to the beauty of any city. For horses and automobiles, bitulithic is the ideal paving. While smooth and even, it affords horses a foothold and prevents automobiles from skidding, both of which are useful in the extreme.

LEBANON COMMENDS LAYING BITULITHIC

Active work has commenced at Lebanon and 18 blocks of bitulithic paving are being laid in the thriving valley town.

Lebanon carefully considered the matter of paved streets and before awarding contracts made a thorough investigation of paving materials in use in other cities and towns.

Bitulithic was awarded the contract on account of several important reasons—prominent among them being that bitulithic is noiseless, lasting and durable—free from ruts and chuckholes and a paving material which in other cities has proven itself specially free from constant repair expenses.

A Few Good Rules for the Sick Room.

A few good rules for the ordering of the sick room are given by Mrs. Alice Marks Dolman, instructor in dietetics and home nursing at the Oregon Agricultural College, in one of her recent lectures.

"Whatever the threatened or actual disorder may be, there are two important things to be done at the beginning," she said. "The first is to have absolute rest and quietness for the patient. The second is to keep the bed clean, to keep the room clean, and to have plenty of good, clean, fresh air for the patient to breathe.

"Rest means something more than just being in bed. It means freedom from petty annoyances, from unexpected jolts or jars, from creaking shoes or creaking chairs, or rattling windows, and from continued thinking and planning out of things.

"In preparing a room for a patient, give her the cheeriest room possible, one that can be ventilated easily, and one that is far enough from the kitchen that she does not get the odor of cooking food.

"It is wise to remove all unnecessary furniture and all things that are dust catchers. This is especially true in the infectious diseases. Many things that do not annoy us or worry us when we are well become a source of great annoyance to us when we are sick, so that the plainest room is furnished for the sick, the better it is.

CONTROLLING THE RIVERS.

How "Slack Watering" Helps Pittsburgh in the Summer Months.

The rivers of the world are being called upon more and more to contribute to the world's industry. Even where no falls exist the current of a river constitutes a store of energy the immense value of which is becoming widely recognized.

Those rivers whose upper courses are marked by many waterfalls are, of course, those possessing the greatest available power. German engineers point out that the Danube is capable of developing, with its Alpine tributaries, something like 2,000,000 horsepower. This statement applies, moreover, only to that part of the Danube's course which lies in Bavaria. Only 700,000 horsepower could be effectively used, and only a little in excess of 75,000 has actually been developed.

Along the Danube it is a common sight to observe large water wheels along the banks driven by the swift current. At one point not far from Vienna there is thus developed a horsepower of 300.

In this country two methods are employed in controlling the waters of rivers. If the volume of water be large and the stream sluggish, so that the river is apt to overflow its banks, levees are constructed to confine the water in the channel, but if the water mass be small and the slope rapid systems of dams and locks are built in order that the water may be held back and the level raised, thus insuring the navigability of the river.

The result of this is called "slack water navigation," and a stream thus treated is frequently described as a "canalized river," since the dams represent a series of steps but for which the water would all run out in the dry season. When the water is high the locks are thrown open, the boatmen preferring to use the natural stream.

One of our most important industrial centers, Pittsburgh, would be a dry land city in the summer months were it not for "slack watering" in the Ohio and the Monongahela.

It is far easier to restrain a river that tends at seasons to run out too fast than it is to hurry along to the sea one that would otherwise devastate the country with its overflow. Millions have been spent on levees in the lower Mississippi, and much yet remains to be accomplished in this line. Remedies such as reservoirs and artificial outlets have proved both inadequate and impracticable.—Harper's Weekly.

 What the man spent for flowers and candy before his wedding was quite some.

But not a red afterward. Accordingly the florists and confectioners filed a bill in the federal court. "This merger," they protested, "is in restraint of trade."—Life.
