STAND UP STRAIGHT.

Keep the Chest Wide Open and Avoid the Great White Plague.

The best way to avoid consumption is to stand up straight, according to the Bulletin of the American Medical Association. The writer says:

"The first essential in the avoidance of tuberculosis of the lungs, or consumption, is to keep the lungs strong, so that if the germs are breathed they can do no harm. One of the most important things in keeping the lungs strong is to keep the chest wide open so that the lungs can be properly used. If the body is drooped or stoops or if the shoulders are allowed to drag forward (round shoulders) or if the head is carried forward instead of well back over the shoulders the chest must be flattened, the breathing must be shallow, and the lungs, not being freely used, become weak.

"It is in this type of chest that tuberculosis usually begins. The consumptive is usually narrow chested, with drooped shoulders and with the head craned forward.

"While the development of a strong, well formed chest is one of the most important factors in preventing tuberculosis, the same thing is to be desired if the disease has once started. Not only should we live in the open, but we should stand up straight and learn to 'throw a big chest' so that the lungs can grow strong and the fresh air be taken in.

"The runner, the singer or any one who is obliged to make sustained effort is taught to stand and sit with the chest high, so that the lungs can be used to the best advantage, and if every one would do the same thing there would be less tuberculosis because there would be fewer weak lungs."

ELECTRIFIED CELLULOID.

Pulling a Couple of Strips Between the Fingers Changes Them.

If you will take two thin lengths of celluloid, put them in contact and then suddenly and rapidly pull them between your fingers you will observe they both have become electrified—not only on their outside surfaces, where the friction of your fingers caused a negative electrification, but also on the inner surface of the celluloid.

The strange part about this is that one of the inner surfaces of the piece is positively charged and the other one is negatively charged. If one of them is slightly curved during the friction the convex one will be positively charged and the concave sided one will be negatively charged.

It seems, therefore, to depend upon whether the surface is concave or expanded—to produce negative or positive electricity. Even the most minute, imperceptible curvature is sufficient to give the expected result. It also is impossible to pull the strips of celluloid through the fingers without producing such strong electrification that one piece will support the other.

Even the vapor pressure of liquids is stronger at the convex surface than at the concave. If electrons are considered as particles of gas dissolved in solids—as they once were—or as negative electricity, there will be a greater

GOOD BUSINESS SUGGESTIONS

"Hank Smith bot a mail-order house gasoline engine and after he'd finally got it started, one of the fly wheels came off, rolled out into the barn yard and durned near took the leg off'n his best heifer. Hank just got an axe and broke the rest of it to pieces. He was so mad that he went right into the Larkin-Prince store and bought a brand New Stover and that started right off and is workin' every minute. Hank says hereafter he wouldn't no more think of buyin' stuff sight-unseen than he'd think of holdin' a cow for a cock-eyed butcher to hit in the head with a Keen-Kutter axe.

"I tell you boys we all earn our money and can blow it where we please but as for me I'll spend mine at home; then I always see what I'm gettin' and when I go to bed at night I don't feel like I was sorter robbin' myself, cause every dollar spent at home helps home people, helps home industries, helps build good roads to travel on, helps build bridges across the big rivers, helps our school system, helps everybody in the community and if you ship a dollar to the other side of Sherwood it don't help us tellers up here on the mountain very much and you don't get any more goods for your money neither.

"Say boyshev you heard about that demonstration train that's comin' thru here on the 4th of February to show us fellers somethin' about raising hogs and dairyrin'? Well I was raised on a farm and hev been there all my life but I'm just fool enuf to go in there and see if I can learn somethin' from them professors what rides around on them kind tendency for the electrons to escape from the convex side, which therefore will be left positively charged. This also is in perfect accord with the latest researches upon electrons.

Interesting experiments can be made by following the above directions. Celluloid has peculiar properties for tests.—New York Press.

Railway Trains in England.

I can prove in a moment by any traveler that our trains are infinitely more luxurious than the trains in England. But still, and notwithstanding, I say the English railway service is better. Why? Because it's more human; it's more considerate. You aren't driven and urged to step lively and called at in loud, harsh voices and made to feel that you are being tolerated aboard something that was never made for you at all, but for the employees of the company. In England the trains are for the people, not the people for the trains.—From Theodore Dreiser's "A Traveler at Forty."

Worse Yet.

"He's a frightful bore, your baron. Here he's been buzzing the whole evening long about Kant and Schopenhauer."

"You have my sympathy. For my part I detest philosophical discussions."

"Philosophical discussions, indeed! Kant and Schopenhauer are the names of the baron's two horses."—New York Post.

Breaking Him In.

"Do you want me to misrepresent the goods and say they are fine when they are not?" asked the new salesman.

"Yes," sternly answered the unscrupulous dealer. "Always remember that our assets are your liabilities."—Baltimore American.

A Complicated Case.

"Growcher always looks worried. Why doesn't he think of something pleasant?"

"Well, he has himself kind of whipsawed. The only thing he thinks of with pleasure is money. And he can't think of money without worrying."—Washington Star.

Nice Family Jar.

"Last night," said Mr. Henpeck, "I dreamed that I was in heaven."

"And was I there with you?" his wife asked.

"Didn't I say it was heaven?" was his crushing reply.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

SI DRAFT SAYS

of trains. Speakin' about hog raisin' I've got somethin' up my sleeve that will make them professors' eyes stick out about a foot I'll bet.

"I was over visitin' Nels Nelson last week and he showed me an old O. I. C. sow what had 20 pigs at one litter. If them professors ever heard tell of anything that got that skinned in the hog raisin' line, well, I'll go home and give it up but I'm thinkin' they'll ride a long ways in that 'old car fore they'll find an O. I. C. or a Razor Back that will beat that.

"The boys in the 'Big Hdwe. Store' was sayin' they was goin' to hev one of them things what sucks the cows for you while you jest set around and look wise, in that car too, and course I'll hev to look that over for the boys say there's nothin' quite like the Sharples line of Milking Machines and cream separators and if they say so it's pretty durned near the truth, so Hank he has about 10 old cows on his farm and he thinks milkin' them is quite a chore so he is goin' in with me to look at the things.

"Well boys, I'm tellin' you Newberg is gettin' to be quite a place and when we get the electric car service on the R. R. and get our cannery a cannin' our produce, well 'we should worry' cause we'll hev the best community this side of Mars and I'm kind of doubtin' if they're raising hogs, and berries, and such stuff up there yet.

"Spend your money for a share or two of stock in the cannery and if you have any left over spend it at Larkin-Prince Hdwe. Co. the place where you get 100 cents worth for every dollar you spend."
