OUR WEEKLY CHATS

With the Boys at "The Big Hardware Store"

Less Parrish says the floor was a little slick down at Malloy the other night where the Fernwood boys played basket ball and the boys got beat, but they're going after them when they get them up here on the home floor.

Pacific College came home with two victories on their list after visiting the Chemawa Indians and the Philomath College quintet. The way those boys toss the "Spalding" ball will make them all sit up and take notice.

When the weather warms up and you're beginning to itch with the base ball fever, remember we've got the "Spalding line" and can take care of your needs.

Our friend, Lee LaDu, invested in a new John Deere Chilled Plow last week. Lee is looking for quality and he got it and he didn't have to pay full market price either, as we are giving our trade the benefit of our early purchases on these goods.

Tom Burns brought us some cedar posts last week that are full size and free from knots and rough spots. Well seasoned and best quality—limited quantity.

We are offering 9-39 Heavy American Fence at 48 cents per rod and the lighter weight at 39 cents. These prices are 3 points under the market. Our policy is to sell our stock on hand at the very best prices we can make regardless of present costs, and we advise early buying as all markets in our line are strong and there is nothing in sight to indicate lower prices. Let us quote you prices before you place your order for Hardware and Implements.

Michael Kashko, who is a mechanic in the Willamette Iron Works, bought one of the little Fairbanks "Z" engines of us this week. He says they're good enough for him. The price is right and the Fairbanks people back up the quality. Type "Z" 1 1/2 H. P. $45.75—Fairbanks 1000 lb. scales $17.85 Special.

When you get ready to Spray we're right in line to take care of your needs with the "Hardie" pumps and equipment. Quality beyond question and prices right.

Our old Cole's Heater is a good thing to warm up by these cold days when you come to town. You are always welcome at "The Big Hardware Store" whether you want goods or just drop in to visit us. We have installed an extension phone out by our Cash Register for the Convenience of our Trade. Come in and use it—talk is cheap.

Consult with us on market conditions before you spend your money for Hardware and Implements. If we can't give you the right price we don't expect your business. pd adv

SHE ANSWERED NAPOLEON.

And Her Brave Reply Subdued the Angry Conqueror.

Napoleon, the rough and ruthless conqueror, considered women as of no importance in national affairs, and he was always resentful of their interference. But in at least one instance of record, as a recent writer has pointed out, it was otherwise.

When, after the battle of Jena, Napoleon entered Weimar he proceeded to the palace of the duke to make it his headquarters. The fighting and plundering in the town were not yet over when, toward evening, he entered the hall. As he did so the duchess, who had been waiting in her apartment, appeared at the top of the great staircase to greet him.

"Who are you?" he demanded roughly, in surprise.

"I am the Duchess of Weimar," she replied, with dignity.

"I pity you," he cried fiercely. "I am going to crush your husband!"

The next morning when they met again he inquired, with brusque displeasure:

"Madame, how could your husband be so mad as to make war against me?"

"Your majesty would have despised him if he had not," was the reply.

"How so?" asked Napoleon.

"My husband has been in the service of the king of Prussia upward of thirty years," replied the duchess. "Surely it was not at the moment that the king had so mighty an enemy as your majesty to contend against that the duke could abandon him."

An answer at once so spirited, noble and tactful softened even Napoleon's arrogance. In the conversation that followed the duchess was able to secure promises of consideration for the duke and relief for the townspeople. At the close of it the conqueror said to her, "Madame, you are more worthy of respect than any woman I have known. You have saved my husband. I pardon him, but remember it is wholly on your account. As for him, he is a bad case!"

That was merely Napoleon's opinion. The duke, at any rate, was properly appreciative of his duchess, for when the document that secured the independence of Weimar was brought to him by a French general he refused to take it into his hands, but said simply, "Give it to my wife, the emperor intended it for her."—Youth's Companion.

TEMPLES OF JAPAN.

Hundreds of Thousands of Them Dot the Island Empire.

The choicest examples of the marvelous art crafts of Japan are to be seen in the temples founded by the shoguns of old Japan. A German traveler, visiting the sanctuaries of Shimbura, remarks, "One is overwhelmed at each step by the richness of the materials, the prodigality of the decoration, the fineness of details and the solemn magnificence of the entire spectacle." Idols, or sacred images, as they are sometimes called, are much in evidence. Millions of sculptured Buddhas of all sizes, both wood and stone, embellish the buildings and the temple gardens.

There are today more than 200,000 sanctuaries, both Shinto and Buddhist, scattered up and down the island empire. There are 10,000 in and about Kyoto, once the sacred capital of Nippon. For thousands of years it has been a Japanese custom to build a shrine by the roadside where the wayfarer may enter and refresh the soul. Here the rank and file go to pray and woo the favor of the gods. A priest dressed in a long robe of red silk conducts the service, preaching two short sermons for the edification of a handful of women, girls and old men.

In the large temples of the cities a company of priests in white, yellow and brown robes takes part in the services, regularly held on the 1st and 15th of the month, usually in the afternoon or evening. The opening hymns are sung, accompanied by flutes and other instruments. Of late years some of the Buddhist leaders have introduced the organ to aid them in making the temple music more pleasing and inspiring.—Exchange.
