THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1917

It is no unusual thing to hear the common herd assert that newspaper stories can't be relied on, but our observation is that with the present tension on, the stories going by word-of-mouth need considerable backing up in the way of confirmation before they may be repeated by one who cares for his reputation for truth and veracity. Last week the story was circulated in McMinnville that a number of Germans had been thrown into jail in Newberg, and this week the word was passed about in Newberg that Attorney B. A. Kliks, of McMinnville, had been juggled for treasonable actions. Other similar instances might be cited where the newspapers have been discounted by several furlongs in the way of disseminating windy "war stories." It will be wise during these days of exciting war talk to keep a cool head and decline to help circulate stories calling in question the loyalty and patriotism of one's neighbors.

A great mail order house in Chicago has just closed a contract for 120,000 tons of catalogue paper, which means 240,000,000 pounds, which will be sent out through the mails in the form of catalogues during the present year, says an eastern paper. An estimate as to the cost of this paper alone at three cents a pound means that this firm will spend $7,200,000 for the print paper alone, to which they will add the expense of printing and mailing to get their bargains before people of the country. This is the means resorted to, and the extreme expense incurred in getting the business of the country merchant throughout the broad land. Judicious advertising on the part of country merchants is the only method with which to combat the mail order house, and a comparison of prices in local papers will have more to do with retaining the trade of the home people than any other method. Show your customers and the public generally that you can duplicate the mail order figures and you will get the business.—Washington Co. News.

WHAT IS A DISCIPLE?

Had the engineer who had charge of the re-building of the Rex-Tigard road two years ago been a disciple of Sam Hill, the good roads advocate and builder, the grave mistake he made in not providing proper drainage, would have been averted, for Mr. Hill says that above everything else, road work to be of permanent value must include good drainage. This fact ought to be apparent, even to a school boy, and yet some very bad places are showing up on the Rex-Tigard road from lack of drainage.—Newberg Graphic.

But the funny part of it is that the engineer in charge when the atrocities of the Rex-Tigard road were committed was a disciple of Sam Hill and was that gentleman's particular pet, so much so that Sam became decidedly peeved when an overwhelming public demand resulted in the engineer's discharge. The experience proves the difference between theory and practice, for there is no doubt of Mr. Hill's sincerity in the good roads cause and he probably believed his man best suited to carry out the big plans, but the experience in Columbia and Jackson counties proved that his ability at picking was not equal to his enthusiasm. This particular experience is timely just now when we are figuring upon again embarking on an extensive plan of highway improvement and should serve as a guide to the highway commission in appointing the man who will fill the responsible position of chief engineer. It will be easy to again make a mistake.—Hillsboro Independent.

The definition for disciple as given by Webster is: "A follower who has learned to believe in the truth of the doctrine of his teacher. Disciple always implies personal adherence to the views or doctrines of one's master or teacher." Accepting this as a true definition of the word, the Graphic maintains that its statement was correct. In Mr. Hill's public talks for good roads he lays great stress on the importance of proper drainage and those who have seen the roads he has built at Maryhill in Washington say they are about as nearly perfect as roads can be made. This being true, it is evident that the engineer who had charge of the work on the Rex-Tigard road was not a true disciple of Hill. He failed to give "personal adherence to his views."

BE JUST AND GENEROUS TO GERMAN SUBJECTS IN U. S.

There were in the United States, when the census was taken in 1910, 1,278,667 males of German birth, 21 years of age and over. Of that number 889,007 were naturalized citizens of the United States; 127,103 were German subjects—aliens; and the citizenship of the remaining 262,557 was not reported, says the Spokesman-Review.

It is with this non-naturalized element of 127,103 German-born subjects of the kaiser that our government would be concerned in case of war with Germany. Undoubtedly many of them are American in spirit and look upon this country as their abiding home, and their failure to establish American citizenship was a matter of neglect rather than of disinclination to take on its responsibilities. These will now hasten to take their places under the Stars and Stripes.

But the problem that faces the others is not so easy of solution. Many of them have interests in the United States which cannot be abruptly relinquished without financial loss, and since the ocean highways are closed against them and they are unable to return to their native land, they would probably like to remain here.

So long as they are law-abiding they should be treated with courtesy and consideration. We should adhere to the reasonable assumption that even if Germany and the United States should declare war, the great body of these German subjects will respect our laws and not violate their privilege of asylum. While some of them may plot acts of violence they can be left to official vigilance and the orderly processes of justice and dealt with as other defendants in the criminal courts.

The mistake must not be made of misjudging the innocent by the misdeeds of the guilty few. Because some Englishmen are anarchists we do not think that all Englishmen are so. Because an American believes in I. W. W. lawlessness it does not follow that any great number of Americans are of that destructive bent.

While some alarm has been expressed, the Spokesman-Review does not believe there is any considerable danger from the presence here of a number of German subjects. Self-interest, propriety and the sensible counsel they will have from our loyal citizens of German birth or origin, will generally be found of sufficient restraint. If there should be individual exceptions they should be treated individually and with the orderly processes of the law.

OUR WEEKLY CHATS

With the Boys at The Big Hardware Store

We have lots to tell you this week. The women and girls are getting interested in that $10.00 Percolator in our window that someone is going to get for baking a loaf of bread.

Universal "Kitchen Efficiency Week" April 9th to 14th is a big National Contest open to all the women and girls absolutely free. See the prizes in our window and ask us about the details.

Say! And have you seen that Inlaid Game Table in our window, made by Tom Duncan and his son Xavier? It is certainly a beauty. Made up of 15,000 different pieces of wood of nine different kinds. The value of this table is $250.00 and there are very few people that could make it at any price. Come in and look at it and incidentally note the high finish you can get with a quality piece of goods like Chisel, and don't forget that there's nothing better for going over your old furniture and wood work in your home.

Jim Murphy, one of our St. Paul friends, bought a John Deere Disc this week, and likewise Pete Baughman. These men want quality implements and they know they take no chances when they buy John Deere goods. We sell and guarantee them to be the equal, if not superior, to other lines of implements right straight through.

The "Spalding Suite" came through this week for the Pacific College Base Ball Boys. They're mighty classy and well put up like anything you get with the "Spalding" trademark on it. Watch for the first game that P. C. pulls off and we'll watch the boys perform in their new rags. If you're interested in any kind of Athletic Equipment and are looking for service and quality let us show you the Spalding line.

Weekly Special this week will be a little Household Paring Knife with patented razor steel blade, at 10 cents each. These are often sold by agents for 25 cents each. Fine for peeling high priced spuds—they make the peeling thin.

You fellows who are going to plant garden stuff for the Can-nery had better look over the Iron Age line before you buy Hand Seeders or Cultivators. We can sell you a Planet Jr. if you want it, but we recommend the Iron Age, and the price is about 25 per cent in your favor, which is an item worthy of notice, and the quality of the line is beyond reproach.

Come to our Store if you want Hardware and Implements—we quote our best price first and show you the goods—if you do not want them there are no hard feelings and no harm done. Our stock is complete and we play fair with our customers. It's a pleasure to show you our goods and quote prices.

The ladies of the Pacific College Auxiliary will have a hot chicken tamale and food sale here at our Store on Saturday, the 14th of April, the same day we pull off the big Bread Baking Contest. Ladies who don't care to get their loaf of bread back can donate it to the Auxiliary for sale, thus helping a good cause along. However, that is optional with the lady who bakes the bread. Anyway, everybody knows these ladies will have some good things to eat for sale and those chicken tamales just melt in your mouth and the tears of joy roll down your cheeks while you eat them. You just can't help it they are so delicious. We're going to have some good time at "The Big Hardware Store" on the 14th of April and you'll miss something if you don't come in and visit us and incidentally try out in the big Universal Kitchen Efficiency Contest.
