DICKENS FAMILY PROVISION.

Election of Henry Fielding Dickens, son of Charles Dickens, the novelist, by the aldermen of the city of London to the office of common sergeant, which carries with it a salary of $15,000 a year, will cause gratification to many admirers of his father in America, says the Richmond Times-Dispatch. It is true that the versatile caricaturist made a lot of fun of our institutions when they were in a crude state, and there was a time when his burlesques of our boasted business progressiveness were not well relished, but he was master of a form of humor which appealed irresistibly to the American sense of the ludicrous, and so he was forgiven. Of late years, stories of the poverty of his descendants caused grief in this country, which will be relieved at the news of his son's good fortune.
