Great Structures In England Similar to Village Churches.

Unapproachable in Dignity; Beautiful as Cathedrals; No Ostentation of the Builder's Art.

The great old stone barns of England, dating many of them, from the fourteenth century, are, comparatively speaking, little known to the general public, says the Christian Science Monitor. The beautiful architecture to be found in the English village churches has received its full meed of appreciation, and so, though possibly in a slightly less degree, have the fine old manor houses which dot the countryside and provide a most interesting study in the local variations which occur in the generally prevailing style at any given period. The barns, however, have been rather neglected, and literature on the subject is practically nonexistent.

Yet the barn is intimately bound up with the history of the neighborhood in which it stands, and where, for possibly nearly 500 years, it has been fulfilling practically the same eminently important functions, with little change, for the benefit of the folk in its neighborhood. The methods of the farmer may vary, but the general routine of the countryside goes on, much the same, century after century, and the great barns still stand ready to house the people's food as they have done, summer and winter, for so many hundred years.

These old Gothic barns are very dignified and very beautiful buildings, comparable in some ways to the village churches whose contemporaries they are, and if they are less ornate, they are, in their simplicity, hardly less imposing. Indeed, some people would give the balance in favor of the barns in this matter.

It is by no means always an easy matter to tell the precise date of these barns at first sight, but sometimes there is a little carving, a bit of tracery or a final which will supply the clue, or possibly again, the form of a buttress may afford an indication; but fortunately there are generally local records to which access may be had containing details of the origin and foundation of the barns.

Among the famous fourteenth century barns of England are those at Glastonbury, Wells and Pilton in Somersetshire, Great Coxwell in Berkshire and Abbotsbury in Dorsetshire. These are all what may be described as barns of the first magnitude; great cruciform buildings which may well vie in size and dignity with many churches.

Of the barn at Great Coxwell, William Morris said that it was "unapproachable in its dignity, as beautiful as a cathedral, yet with no ostentation of the builder's art," and he always declared that it was one of the finest buildings in England or anywhere else.

ONE RESULT OF THE WAR

Little Village of Oberammergau Has Received Spiritual and Physical Blow.

Oberammergau, the little village in Bavaria that became world-famous as the home of the Passion Play, is virtually a deserted village where sorrow broods. All of its male inhabitants capable of bearing arms have entered the ranks of the Bavarian army, and many have fallen in battle.

Miss Madeleine Doty, who has visited the village, in recording her experiences relates a conversation that she had with a waitress at the little hotel.

"The town is sad," we averred. "Why shouldn't it be?" she retorted. "We have lost so much."

"How many men have gone to war?" we asked.

"Every one under 45. Five hundred and fifty out of a population of 1900."

We paused a moment. It seemed brutal to go on now, but we wanted information.

"There were 40 killed and 48 wounded the first year. I don't know the number now."

"Will there ever be another Passion Play?"

She shrugged her shoulders. "How can I tell? Some of the players and musicians have lost an arm or a leg and others are dead. The town no longer has any money."

We pushed back our chairs and went out into the golden sunshine. No one moved about the streets. It was like a village swept by a plague and deserted. War has been a special disaster to Oberammergau. It has dealt a blow at its spiritual as well as its physical welfare.—Atlantic Monthly.

Legend of Alsace.

There is a quaint old legend of Alsace concerning a family of giants who, once upon a time, lived in a certain castle in a certain valley of the old country. The moral of the story seems appropriate at a time when the French minister of agriculture, to mention but one of the allies, is making special effort to encourage the cultivation of land.

The giants lived, says the legend, far from the peasants of the plain, and one day the daughter of the house, who, though quite a child, was already 30 feet high, strolled toward the plain and saw a laborer peacefully plowing his field. She picked up the peasant, the horse and the plow and put them in her pinafore and returned to the castle to show what she had found to her father.

"What you think is but a toy," said the giant, "is what produces the food which enables us to live. Put back the laborer and his horse where you found them." From that time onward, adds the tale, the peasants were never molested by the giants.—Christian Science Monitor.

Voluntary Rationing.

Controller Hoover congratulated a Washington gathering on the success of the voluntary rationing system.

"The observance of voluntary rationing has been universal," he said. "I heard the other day of a tiny urchin on a picnic in the country who ran to his mother with tears in his eyes. 'What's the matter?' his mother asked."

"The urchin held out a swollen finger and shouted indignantly: 'Them bees! Today is a meatless Tuesday, and them bees ain't observin' it!'"

In Plain Sight.

Willie Stone had been sent on an errand to the home of the rich Mr. Lott. He returned with the astonishing news that Mr. Lott was going blind.

"What makes you think that?" his father asked.

"The way he talked," said Willie. "When I went into the room where he wanted to see me, he said, 'Boy, where is your hat?' and there it was on my head all the time!"—Harper's Magazine.

DUNDEE

John Herring and F. W. Meyer are adding to their drier capacity.

Mrs. Homer Fisher and little son have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. John Edwards.

Clark Smith, who has been visiting the home folks, returned to The Dalles on Monday.

Grandpa Willard, for some time a resident of Dundee, passed away at Dayton on Tuesday morning, July 30. Funeral services were held at Dayton on Wednesday.

Frederick Holzmeyer, Uel Marr, James Allan, Henry Billich, John and George Trunk, Hans Groth and Harold Parrett are doing their bit just now by helping with the threshing in nearby harvest fields.

Lloyd Vedder, George Gibbons, Clifford Gibbons and Ernest Thun are Dundee boys who recently went into training for Uncle Sam, making twenty-nine in all from Dundee who have answered their country's call.

Mrs. Lloyd Vedder, whose husband recently enlisted, is visiting Mr. Vedder's mother, Mrs. Ashna Vedder, and his sister, Mrs. Thomas Owens. Mrs. Pederson, Mr. Vedder's sister, has also been a visitor at the Owens home.

At a recent meeting of the Dundee school board and the prune growers of the community it was decided to begin the school year on the 19th of August, thus giving one month of school before the prune-time vacation.

On Sunday of last week Mr. and Mrs. Michael Muller entertained two French families of Portland and six sailor boys at a picnic dinner. Mayor George Larkin, of Newberg, was a guest of the day and delivered a patriotic address. He afterward took an auto load of the guests to Portland.

On Monday afternoon a fire near the camp of lumbermen engaged in getting out ship knees south west of Dundee got beyond control and for a time threatened timber and orchards of John Herring and others. A large force of men was quickly summoned and by four o'clock the danger was past. A night watch was detailed to patrol the district to prevent a new outbreak of the fire. The principal damage done was the burning of a large number of tools belonging to the lumbermen.

The regular monthly business meeting of the Dundee Red Cross will be held in the library on Friday evening, August 2. An interesting program has been arranged and it is hoped that there will be a large attendance. The men of the community are especially urged to attend as these business meetings are the times when their advice and encouragement are especially appreciated. Dundee is justly proud of her Red Cross activities. These meetings are held not solely to report on the month's work and to discuss Dundee's part in the great work of the organization, but they are an informal social affair, fostering the community spirit for which our district is noted. Owing to a scarcity of materials for work in Red Cross circles, meetings of the Dundee auxiliary are postponed until after prune harvest.

On Sunday the community was saddened by the news of the death at San Diego of Mrs. Charles Parrett. Mrs. Parrett was a daughter of John Livengood, a pioneer of Dundee, who has spent all her life here. She was the most beautiful young woman in Dundee and had a clear soprano voice of unusual volume. Her genial disposition endeared her to a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Lila Livengood Parrett was born in September, 1883. In the summer of 1907 she married Charles Parrett, one of Dundee's most popular young men. Mrs. Parrett leaves a husband, two children, and a father to whom the sincere sympathy of the community is expressed. The remains arrived at Dundee at 9 o'clock Wednesday morning where scores of friends assembled with floral offerings and escorted the funeral party to the church where short services were held. Burial was made in the family lot in the cemetery here.

IT IS

good business for you to "shop" these days on any class of merchandise—There are no standard prices on account of the daily change of markets.

We do not claim to have all the "bargains" but we believe we have our share and are placed in a very advantageous position on account of our large stock, and the daily arrival of delayed shipments of goods ordered from factories some 6 or 8 months ago.

For instance—last week there came to us quite a large shipment of LISK heavy tin-ware, including Boilers, dishpans, milk pails, etc.

an order we placed with Factory a long time ago, but on account of war conditions were not delivered sooner. What does it mean?

It simply means that we can put this shipment of goods out to our customers at least 20 per cent under today's market prices. No one doubts the quality of the "Lisk Ware" and should you be needing something in this line make tracks for "The Big Hardware Store."

It costs you nothing to look at our stock, and we are always glad to have you make inquiry for anything in the Hardware and Implement line before you buy—it will do no harm and we might save you some money—who knows!

ALUMINUM SPECIAL

A very few of these Life Time Vegetable Cookers at $1.68—the lid went come off when you drain the water off the vegetables and a nice size kettle for daily use. Worth at least $2.50 on today's market.

JUST A TIP

We are expecting to receive advance in prices on plows, harrows, drills, etc., any day and some of our customers are anticipating their needs 60 or 90 days ahead of time and placing orders now for such implements as they will need this fall. No chance to lose and all to gain, the advance is bound to hit us.
