MARCHING TO BERLIN

(To Marching Through Georgia.)
Bring the good old bugle, boys! we'll sing another song—
Sing it with the spirit that will start the world along—
Sing it as we used to sing it, several million strong,
While we were marching to Berlin.

Chorus—
Hurrah! hurrah! we bring the jubilee!
Hurrah! hurrah! the flag that makes you free!
So we sang the chorus while we charged to victory,
While we were marching to Berlin.

How the Poilus shouted when they heard the joyful sound!
How the women thanked us, which our mighty army found!
How the children cheered us when released from underground,
While we were marching to Berlin.

Yes, and there were other men who wept with loyal tears,
When they saw the honored flag they had not seen for years;
Hardly could they be restrained from breaking forth in cheers,
While we were marching to Berlin.

"Pershing's dashing Yankee boys will never reach the Rhine,"
So the boasting Kaiser said, before we crushed his line.
He could not believe that we would force him to resign,
While we were marching to Berlin.

So we made a thoroughfare for freedom and her train,
A thousand miles in latitude, ten thousand to the main,
Kultur fled before us for resistance was in vain,
While we were marching to Berlin.

Thus we hurled autocracy from a benighted land,
Thus was freedom's banner raised by a united band,
May it float forever, never soiled by despot's hand,
Because we were marching to Berlin

—C. W. Bradshaw,
November 15, 1918.

THE BRIGHTER SIDE.

"You must be prepared to make sacrifices."

"I'm ready for that," answered the patient patriot.

"Good!"

"In fact, every time any grocer tells me that butter has gone up again I say, 'Praised be the Lord! A man with my income couldn't even buy a fair substitute in Berlin.'"—Birmingham Age-Herald.

PASS UP PREACHING.

First Private (over there at a rest station)—There's a bishop coming to preach to us at nine in the morning and a vaudeville star to dance for us at ten."

Second Private—Wake me up at ten.—Life.

CAN YOU SPELL YOUR NAME?

Question Not Really Offensive, in View of the Fact That There Are Many Who Cannot.

Can you spell your middle name correctly. If so, be proud of that fact, for there are a lot of men in Indianapolis who cannot.

At one of the draft registration rooms Thursday the men who were typing the names from the cards kept a record of some of the middle names that the registrants were unable to spell.

A young man who had always written his name with the middle "I," unthoughtful of the morrow, was confronted suddenly with the spelling of the name for which it stood. He wrote it Issac, then said he guessed that wasn't just right, but it would do.

Another was named for Grover Cleveland and had been accustomed to write the name "Grover C." When he took the pen to sign his full name to the card, he wrote "Grover" with a flourish, added the "C," then stopped short. At last a bright idea struck him. He took his eyes from the wall at which he had gazed for inspiration and looked at the top of the card to see how the registration officer had spelled the name. He copied that spelling on the bottom line.

Virgil, as a middle name, proved a stumbling block for another registrant. He finally wrote it "Vergal."—Indianapolis News.

ACCORDING TO THE NUMBER.

"Birthdays are milestones."
"Or skipping stones."

SCARING A GERMAN.

During the German retreat the enemy's last rear-guard action was made by hostile planes that flew back over the American lines.

One of these planes was flying over a big field in the direction of a French town where American troops were stationed. At the edge of this town an American machine gunner had his machine well camouflaged, waiting for just such a target. Just as the German flyer got half way across the field the American opened fire from his hidden position.

"Did you get him?" his captain asked.

"No, sir," answered the gunner, "but I must have scared him a bit, because he dropped all three of his bombs together out in this vacant field and beat it back about as fast as a bullet could travel."—Paris Stars and Stripes.

A LITTLE OF BOTH.

Aunt Nancy was visiting an army camp and as she approached some rookies were sitting on their heels and then rising to a standing position in perfect unison.

"What are the boys doing now?" she asked.

"Why, those are the setting-up exercises," explained an obliging sergeant.

"Humph," remarked auntie. "Looks to me more like settin' down exercises."

TIME OUT.

"Do you believe in peace without victory," asked the patriotic person of the facetious feller.

"You bet I do," was the reply. And when the replier came to, he looked about mournfully and remarked, "Say, you wuz a little hasty, but I forgive you. I was going to add 'for Germany.'"

FEMININE GEAR.

"We're talking of taxing gowns, face powder, feathers and silk hosiery," remarked Congressman Wombat.

"Well?"

"I hope the women won't cite that as an example of man-made laws."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

DESCRIBED.

"What was his excuse for asking exemption?"

"An interesting one. You know he's just a little past forty. He says he is perfectly willing to go and fight the Hun, but the way the Boche is retreating now he's afraid he won't be able to run fast enough to catch up to him."

AN EXULTANT DEBTOR.

"You owe your country something," remarked the prudent person.

"No doubt about it," replied the confident citizen. "Among other things I owe my country all my credit will stand for Liberty bonds."

PROVIDING FOR THE FUTURE.

"Do you lay anything by for a rainy day?"

"No, sir. These Liberty bonds are for protection against possibilities of something worse than a mere rainstorm."

SURE ENOUGH.

"What lesson is the war teaching us?" asked the teacher.

"I know," replied the bright little boy. "How to pronounce the names of a lot of those French towns."

THE REASON.

"They don't seem to be making as much as they might of this Champagne success in France, do they?"

"I suppose Mumm's the word."
