FOOTBALL IS ANCIENT SPORT

Was Popular Among the Old Romans
and Also Found Some Favor
With the Florentines.

Can you imagine Julius Caesar playing quarterback on the Rome university eleven, or Brutus skirting the ends to those days when the forum was as busy as a three-ring circus? No? Nevertheless it was a probability, for it appears now that football originated with the Romans.

A few uneducated persons used to think that football was of Greek invention; but Trench and Camp's trained news hounds, aided by Italian propagandists, have fastened it on Rome. The Romans, not really knowing that it was football, called it "calcium." It appears to have been a goodly, rough-going game, full of spirit, feet and broken elbows, played more on the soccer order than the Rugby style in common favor.

With the fall of the Roman empire "calcium" also fell out of the spotlight, not to appear in favor until the time of the Florentines and their Medici. There is no record of Machiavelli having participated in the games, but we imagine that if he did he played a foxy, clever game. Giovanni de Bardi, a well-known Florentine newspaper man, wrote as follows in 1580:

"The calcio (later name) is a public game played between two groups of young men on foot, not armed, who playfully compete in making a ball, by means of their feet, pass outside of a certain line back of the opposite group. The ball is mediocre in size, filled with wind, and the game is played purely for the honor of winning."

CATALONIA GREAT SEA POWER

Spanish Province Centuries Ago Held
Undisputed Naval Sway—People
Still Proud of Achievements.

The Moors were expelled from Barcelona in the ninth century. Catalonia had more than four centuries' start over Seville and six over Malaga. It is little wonder, therefore, that Spanish enterprise, if such a term is applicable, is seen at its best in Catalonia, because it has had a real opportunity to express itself. Catalonia has always looked beyond its geographical limits. It has, in fact, looked seaward. It was on the waves that the men of Barcelona found riches and glory. They were the rivals of the Pisans, Genoese and Venetians, and Barcelona can boast of a naval history as great perhaps as theirs. Catalonia for a time held sway of the sea, and it was only upon the consolidation of Spain at the beginning of the sixteenth century and the rise of the great modern states that the city was eclipsed as a sea power. The Catalonians, proud of their achievements, looked with little favor upon Columbus' discovery of America, an enterprise which had been promoted by neighboring Castile.

The Razor in History.

In tracing the history of shaving it should be sufficient to go back to the Greeks and Romans, upon whose civilization our own is based. Beards were highly esteemed among the former up to the time of Alexander the Great, who was smooth shaven. One reason for the abolition of the beard among soldiers was the fact that it afforded the enemy something to lay hold of. At an earlier period the wearing of certain types of helmet and gorget had protected the beard. The Romans wore beards down to the time of the Gallic wars, while the Gauls, albeit barbarians, were smooth shaven save for the mustache. The antiquity of barber shops and razors in Rome is variously given by historians. Some have claimed that the first barber shop, at least in that part of the world, was opened in Sicily in 300 B. C., while other authorities make this date far earlier or later. The Sicilian seems to have been the first barber.

Lucky Kiss.

A man named Winch, a butcher of Sydney, N. S. W., recently took the liberty of kissing a handsome girl who was one of his customers. She resented the affront, and Winch was prosecuted. He was fined heavily by the board of magistrates, and lengthy notices of the case appeared in the press. The publicity given to the proceedings happened to attract the notice of a firm of solicitors in Sydney, who had been appointed trustees of certain property which had been left to Winch by a distant relative some years before, the solicitors up to then having been unable to find any trace of the missing heir. Winch was communicated with by the firm, and having duly established his identity, became the possessor of a snug little fortune.

Wonderful View From Stirling.

It is from the top of a sheer crag, more than 400 feet above the sea, that the famous "links" of the Forth may be seen to best advantage. It is always a wonderful view from Stirling castle, wonderful for its sheer beauty, and wonderful, too, for the wealth of history which surrounds every town and village which dots the plain, through which the river winds on, picking up the light here and there, vanishing into the haze of the distance, and then emerging again as the mist, maybe, suddenly rises; whilst far away on the eastern horizon, just a gray outline against the sky, is the Forth bridge, where the river has given way to the Firth.

Administrator's Notice of Final Settlement

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned administrator of the estate of A. J.
