

John Milton, Wonderfully Gifted Intellectually, Was Yet a Man of Many Sorrows.

The great English poet, Milton, is described at the age of sixteen as "scholarly, accomplished and as handsome a youth as St. Paul's had sent forth." That was at the age when, having finished preparatory school, he was ready for the university.

He was born on Broad street, London. His father was a man of education, with a decided talent for music. Milton inherited all his esthetic qualities—indeed, the rougher element at college called him "the lady," though all recognized his intellectuality. Even at that period, long before he was twenty, he contemplated writing the great "Paradise Lost," which was not finished, it happened, for forty years.

During that long lapse of time Milton had started his reputation by the twin poems, "L'Allegro" and "L'Allegro," had married a mere child of seventeen—an unhappy marriage, as it turned out; had written some stirring pamphlets; had almost been killed for opposing the leading politics; had remarried and been left a widower again; had lost his sight; had found the three neglected children of his first marriage not model daughters; had lived in terrible loneliness in spite of his great fame, and had been persuaded to marry a third time, for the sake of being looked after.

He was an old man when the great "Paradise Lost" appeared, which is called "one of the few monumental works of the world," and his death followed some ten years later.

How Tosti Reputed Here.

Many famous singers were pupils of Tosti. During one of the busiest of his mornings, when he had a long list of singing lessons to get through, a knock came at the door of his flat. His valet being ill, Tosti went to the door himself. A lady, strange to him, stood on the threshold. "Signor Tosti," she inquired. Tosti bowed. "Oh," said the lady, "I am singing your song, 'My Memories,' at Manchester tonight, and I want you kindly to run through it with me." "Madam," answered Tosti, politely but firmly, "I fear it is impossible. I have two pupils with me now, and a third is waiting in the ante-room, while others will arrive shortly." "But you must," the lady persisted. "I am sorry—" began Tosti again, when he suddenly received a violent push backwards, and the lady walked into the studio. Tosti followed, protesting. After a long argument, which threatened every moment to become heated, the lady snapped out: "Very well, then, I shan't sing your song." "Madam," said Tosti, taking her by the hand, "I am infinitely obliged to you." The lady gave him one look and fled.
