HAD "GONE WEST"

Pathetic Incident in Hospital Bombarded by Huns.

Wounded Young French Infantry Officer Thought He was Going "Over the Top," and in That Belief Passed On.

The head nurse watched the stretchers clatter slowly and awkwardly down the path and disappear in the darkness between them—a silent, blanket-wrapped figure. Then slowly and thoughtfully she turned and entered the field hospital tent. The pale little nurse's aid, garbed in the picturesque blue of the American Red Cross, rose and came to meet her. In subdued whispers, scarcely audible in the big vacant stillness of the tent, she told the story of any changes which had taken place in the condition of the boys who lay so bravely silent on the 50 Hny cots.

"Bartrand, that young infantry officer in bed No. 9, with the bad chest wound—he does not seem right," she said softly. "His lips are blue, and he sleeps so much."

"Bring your flash," replied the head nurse, as she led the way over to the dark corner where, in a bed separated from the rest, the young Bartrand lay, apparently sleeping. Leaning over him lightly, with a mother touch she laid her hand on his forehead. The boy's eyes opened, dazedly, and blinked in the glare of the aid's flashlight. Then, as with an effort, he smiled.

Suddenly the tent flap nearest them opened. The Scotch orderly entered, reached quickly for the knob that governed the big center tent light and switched it off. Without a word the aid covered her flash and sprang to extinguish the desk light, while old Macdun, the crusty, crept along the tent wall behind the beds to be sure that each window was tightly closed.

Overhead there gradually came into being a steady, regularly interrupted drone, like that of a malignant insect—then a flash—a great roar, not very far away—and the tent shook like a leaf in the wind. At the first sound of the raid Bartrand had started, sitting upright in bed. The head nurse, helpless in the intense darkness and fearing to make him more restless by attempting to put him down, held him in her arms. Soon, says Modern Hospital, in relating the story, he began to call out orders, rapidly, precisely, like a man who was used to being obeyed, and then still louder, with more spirit, until his voice rang and reverberated through the open spaces of the tent. "Attention!—Attention, mes enfants!—Attention!"

From somewhere in the darkness the voice of the aid, a trifle shaky, said: "He thinks he's going over."

Another flash—another detonation—this time nearer. The head nurse felt something warm and wet soaking the front of her uniform. Then a glimpse—it seemed for ages. Finally Macdun, flashing on the light, called out: "They're gone, the beggars!"

He came over to the bed and gave one look at the burden the head nurse held in her arms. Then, taking off his hat, he held it, folded, in front of his coat.

"You can lay him down, miss. I think there's just work for me and the stretcher bearers now. The poor lad's gone west."

Mule Objected to Burden.

An observer attached to the First army had been up for several hours making notes on enemy infantry operations when he was suddenly attacked by a single-seat combat plane, says the Popular Mechanics Magazine. The balloon crew on the ground immediately began to haul the big gas bag down, but the observer was running to chances and took to his parachute. This drifted well back of the lines and deposited him in the midst of a number of grating army mules, and right beside one mule. The mule, not taking kindly to the sudden load forced on him, began to rear and plunge, starting quite a commotion among the herd, and the observer was rescued with difficulty from his precarious position.

Process Developed by War.

Making parabolic mirrors by chemical deposition on a glass mold is described as one of the war-quickened processes. A layer of silver was deposited chemically on a highly polished glass mirror, and was thickened electrolytically, after which it was given a sixteenth inch plating of copper and a suitable backing of strengthening material. Difference in expansion on heating gave a ready means of loosening the metal from the glass. The silver surface was given a waterproof and heatproof coating of lacquer, and was ready for use in much less time than would have been required for grinding and polishing a glass mirror.

American Chemical Products.

The interest in chemistry and chemical products has greatly increased in the United States owing to the fact that this country has been forced by the war to depend upon its own resources in this direction. The following uses are ascribed to these chemical products: In making soap and paper pulp, mercerizing cotton and purifying mineral oils, caustic soda is used; soda ash is necessary in the manufacture of soap and glass; silicates of soda (better known as water glass) is utilized in the manufacture of glass and in drying the printing plates; ligning cotton goods, preventing wood rot, bleaching jute and gunnysack bags.

WHIPPET TANK "BAD ACTOR"

Instrument of Warfare That for Its Eccentric Behavior Was Cribbed by the Kaiser's Huns.

It was with the "whippet" that imagination touched the "tank." The whippet—so named in support from the speedy dog, which chases rabbits to earth—is the racing chariot of the future. She is light—only a few tons!—and should glide and instead of accommodating man Jonah-like in her entrails, carries a cab like a camel's hump, from which one can look some times perpendicularly behind. The whippet has two engines, one for each of her paw series, and that accounts for her eccentric motion. As she runs her eight, ten, up to a conceivable 20 miles, an hour, she squeals raucously. At a rock or a stump—both bad for tanks, which can be "hung up" on their "belly"—she whiffs with unbelievable rapidity, till your eyes are looking one way and your stomach another. Then she rumbles gaily over the field seeking for trees under 12 inches through to practice on, sees a trench, rises on her hind quarters, drops below sky-line with a teeth-shaking bump, grips the further bank, rolls up screaming and charges off for more.

A bank attracts her. She noses it until she finds an angle not quite, but almost perpendicular, and sticking her snout in the sod, worms up, while jostling to the machine gun, and look at grass which is both back of and below you. And as she goes she spits and bleats and rattles the world behind her. If an enemy, you may escape her by lying on the bottom of a trench; you can smash her with a shell if you can catch her on the wing, which is not easy; but the preferable place with a whippet is on top. Never was devised a more dangerous, humorous, human engine of warfare than this—Henry Seidel Canby, in Yale Review.

Executor's Notice of Final Settlement

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned executor of the last Will and Testament of Mary L.
