SUGAR CONSUMPTION IS INCREASING

Increased sugar and candy consumption exceeds sugar production. U. S. beet sugar production in the current year seems likely to be about 1,750,000,000 pounds, against 1,385,000,000 in the year before the war, 1,025,000,000 in 1910, 484,000,000 in 1905, 163,000,000 in 1900, 45,000,000 in 1895 and 5,000,000 in 1890.

The cane sugar crop, which is unusually low, seems likely to form less than one-fifth of the total output of the country on account of conditions in Central Europe.

Sugar beets now contribute only about 25 per cent of the sugar of the world, as against 50 per cent in 1911 and 65 in 1900 and 1897.

Normally, beets supply about one-half of the sugar of the world, their large percentage in 1900 and the years immediately preceding being due to the very small production of cane sugar in Cuba during and immediately following her war with Spain.

The world's production of sugar in the current crop year will probably be about 37,000,000,000 pounds, against 42,000,000,000 in 1914, and the share produced from beets about 25 per cent, as against 47 per cent in 1914.—The Manufacturer.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the Newberg W. C. T. U. a program of service for the coming year was given careful thought and an exhaustive discussion.

It would be impossible to give space to the splendid plans in all lines of our many-sided work but those stressed in this program peculiarly challenge your interest and assistance.

The marvelous victories of the past promise still greater victories in the future. The deeds of every day patriotism, sacrifice and service, rendered so cheerfully and so steadfastly by thousands of earnest men and women, east, west, north and south, have wonderfully helped to bring triumph after triumph.

It is a sacred privilege to count one in the ranks of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—to become an inheritor of its radiant past, a participant in its luminous present and a builder in its brightening future.

The signal victory of right over might and of Christianity over "wickedness in high places" has opened to our organization new and wider channels of service.

November 21, 1918, is a glorious date in our annals and the nation's history. On that eventful day our magna charta of liberty from the domination of the legalized liquor traffic was signed by President Wilson and war prohibition, which went into effect July 1, closed every saloon in America, and every day of war prohibition, imperfect as it has been with an unfriendly administration and with meager enforcement laws, we are learning of miraculous results of sobriety, crime decreased by half, asylums and inebriate hospitals being vacated and a new market created for the ordinary necessities and many of the luxuries of life, and who can say but that the house-embarrassment felt in Portland and all our large cities is not due in a large measure by the fact that the several families that used to be crowded by drink-induced poverty into squalid tenements, are now in the market for homes.

But still there is need for a greater and better patriotism which will result in better law enforcement, stronger total abstinence sentiment for the individual, more and more scientific temperance instruction in the public school and the Sunday school and that teaching among the youth of the land which will insure a greater reverence for law and right.

How can we better pay the debt we owe, what better privilege than to take the blessings of prohibition to other peoples? When this country is dry our testimonial will shake the world. And so, instead of the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union being finished, they are finding the work just begun.

Last March they launched a campaign to make the world dry by 1925. This organization has its branches in forty widely separated countries of the world and is preparing to send fifty more of their best trained missionaries into the countries most in need of temperance training. Tons of literature are being printed in many languages and inside of the next five years the universities of Europe and the Orient and the elementary schools of all the world will be teaching the truth about alcoholic poison and the truth will free the rest of the world as it has freed America.

You will want to hear more about this great movement as well as our Americanization work, child welfare and other lines. For this reason we have the promise of hearing Miss Gladys Hannon, one of our very own girls, who has worked in several states with marked success and has been called back to Montana the third time, the last time to launch the campaign for world prohibition. Watch for further announcement of this meeting. You will all be welcomed. See year's program in next issue of Graphic.

The regular business meeting and birthday social was held at the home of Mrs. Thomas Patterson, on North Main street, Wednesday, September 24, with a good attendance, considering the busy season. At the conclusion of the business session a short program was rendered after which bounteous refreshments were served by the eight ladies in charge. The afternoon was spent in a delightful way, socially.

Two new members were added to our number, Miss Leona Jackson and Mrs. A. H. Gast.

Our next regular meeting will be held at the public library October 8 at 3:30 p. m. A good program has been arranged. We invite you to be present.

HE WENT TOO FAR

Baby Elephant Suffered for His Mischievous Frank.

Trick That Was Too Much for Mother's Patience to Endure Reward—ed by the Equivalent to a Sound Spanking.

In a recent exchange it is stated that elephants are amazingly like human beings in the way they discipline their young. In proof it tells an amusing incident seen by a French traveler in an extensive lumber yard in Burma. While the adult elephants were faithfully at work the youngsters played about the yard. The elephant that attracted the traveler's particular attention was hauling, in her chain harness, huge tree trunks from the bank of the river. She had a heavy load, a fact that her offspring did not realize. Bent on playing a prank, he wound his little trunk around one of the chain traces and pulled back with all his strength.

Conscious of the suddenly increased weight, the mother stopped and looked around. She saw the youngster and shook her head solemnly, but, paying no further heed to his teasing, bent again to her work. Meanwhile the little rascal with his mischievous trunk had loosened the ring that fastened the traces to the load.

While the mother was straining to set her burden in motion again, her rascally son pulled with all his might against her, and pulled so asturdly that she was quite unaware that she had been disconnected from her load. Then, suddenly, the youngster let go. Naturally enough, the mother was thrown to her knees and her driver hurried in a wide circle from her back.

The culprit sought a huge wood-pile that seemed to offer him at least a temporary protection. His mother, with her iron-harness clanging noisily behind her, kept close at his heels.

Although the little one's greater agility gained some space for him at the corners, his mother eventually overtook him. The first blow of her trunk drew from him a bawl of pain. At the second he sank, quite humbled, to his knees; and then he endured without a murmur, although with many tears, a sound thrashing. Finally the mother let him up. With tears still streaming and with drooping trunk he took his disconsolate way out of the yard.

The little fellow had won the complete sympathy of the observer. Consequently he was overjoyed to witness during the noon hour a touching reconciliation. The mother did all she could to comfort the penitent little sinner; she caressed him with her trunk, cuddled him up against her, and looked at him as if to say "You still have a mother who loves you."—Our Dumb Animals.

Dogs in a Different World.

It is widely known that fishes and other lower vertebrates possess numerous types of sense organs quite unlike anything in our own bodies, and it is quite impossible for us to form any conception of what the world appears like to these animals except insofar as their sensory equipment is similar to our own.

When the companionable dog, who responds so sympathetically and intelligently to our moods, lives in a very different world. Recent experiments have shown that his sense of vision is very imperfect, especially for details of form, and everybody knows the inexpressible delirious of the Sound's sense of smell. With us vision is the dominant sense, and our mental imagery is largely in terms of things seen. Even a blind man will say, "I see how it is," when he comprehends a demonstration.

What sort of a world is it to a dog, whose finest experiences and chief interests are in terms of colors?—C. Judson Herrick, in Natural History.

Not Responsible.

The justice of the peace of a certain town was a hardened old bachelor, notoriously averse to marriage. His most intimate friend was to be married and insisted that he perform the ceremony. After much persuasion the justice consented and the affair went on smoothly until the last interrogation. "Do you take this woman to be your lawful wedded wife?" was asked in a pathetic tone.

"I do," was the response. "Then I pronounce you man and wife, but remember, Jack, you asked me to do this. Don't ever blame me for it."

FORTUNES OF WAR

High Military Rank Attained by Humble Civilians.

Sir Douglas Haig Tells of Many Instances That Came to His Notice During the Great War—Men That Failed.

An interview with Sir Douglas Haig, printed in the Manchester Guardian, contains some shocking instances of the romance and fortunes of war. "Promotion," said the field marshal, "has been entirely by merit, and the highest appointments were open to the humblest, provided he had the necessary qualifications of character, skill and knowledge."

Many instances could be quoted of men who, from civil or comparatively humble occupations, have risen to important commands.

"A schoolmaster, a lawyer, a taxicab driver and an ex-sergeant major have commanded brigades."

"One editor has commanded a division and another held successfully the position of senior staff officer to a regular division."

"The undercook of a Cambridge college, a clerk to the Metropolitan water board, an insurance clerk, an architect's assistant and a police inspector became efficient general staff officers."

"A mess sergeant, a railway signalman, a coal miner, a market gardener, an assistant secretary of a haberdashery company, a quartermaster sergeant and many private soldiers have risen to command battalions."

"Clerks have commanded batteries."

"A schoolmaster, a collier, the son of a blacksmith, an iron molder, an instructor in tailoring, an assistant gas engineer, a grocer's assistant, as well as policemen, clerks and privates, have commanded companies and acted as adjutants."

These instances are not strange. They show possession of military instinct which only required the chance to be displayed.

Analyzing further, of course, it could be abundantly shown that some men, although given high rank, fell down lamentably when opportunity for work offered.

While technical education is essential, soldiers are born, not made.

It would be interesting to collate from our own records some of the many instances of American soldiers who rose from the ranks to commissions after a brief apprenticeship to the profession of arms.
