$2.00 Per Year in Advance

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1919.

If the people of this community refuse to be good it will be no fault of the Graphic, since we carry a full column of church announcements.

Should dealers ask fifty cents per pound for Mr. Gobbler, as indicated in the Thanksgiving forecasts, most people will wisely decide to be thankful over a table of more moderate findings.

The sales made of Poland China hogs by an Iowa farmer recently don't give much hope for those who have been looking for lower priced pork. One sow, Goldia 38918, a yearling, brought $7,000 and the average of the animals sold was $700 per head.

The discouraging influence of the war and the general unrest that has followed its close, were given as contributing causes for the decline in membership in the Methodist church, as revealed at the annual conference held in Salem a short time ago.

Last Saturday a big dairy meeting was held at the Valley Canning Co.'s assembly hall where hot coffee and oratory flowed freely, and the only reason the Graphic don't have a first page account of the affair is the failure of J. W. Bailey, the local condensery booster, to furnish the copy as he agreed to do.

The announcement of the purchase of 500 tons of hay for feeding the 3,000 head of fine stock that is to be exhibited at the big stock show to be held in Portland next week will serve to give some idea of the magnitude of it. Every lover of good stock who can get away will want to see this big annual exhibit.

A number of English walnut trees about town that are coming into bearing make it easy for the owners, as well as others, to see what they might have had now, had they set trees of the right kind several years earlier. Much depends, too, on the term, "right kind," for there were a number of trees brought in here from California several years ago and sold at good stiff prices that were not suited at all for Oregon and they proved to be utterly worthless. And speaking of walnuts, L. T. Haward, who has charge of the Thomas Prince walnut farm at Dundee, was in the Graphic office a few days ago and said that walnut shippers were suffering loss and much annoyance by having their packages broken open on the way and walnuts stolen.

Senator McNary and Congressman Hawley are both from Salem and both are studious and active, but the senator appears to have the better knowledge of the value of a good press agent, for we hear of him through the dispatches from Washington a dozen times where mention is once made of Mr. Hawley, although the latter has been in Washington many years longer than has the senator. It is said that Mr. Hawley is known about the nation's capital as being one of the most tireless readers of books among congressmen. Senator Chamberlain's many tilts with Secretary of War Baker gives him plenty of first page notice, and besides, he always was a good advertiser.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found an appeal made by M. G. Oakley for assistance in clearing the right of way for the new road that was surveyed and approved by the county court some time ago, leading over Chehalem Mountain directly north of Newberg. An excellent grade was established and with this road completed it would make life much easier for anyone wanting to travel that way. It means more than that for it would bring travel to Newberg that we do not now get, owing to the condition of the roads as they are. The road as proposed would connect with another on the other side of the mountain that is receiving attention, and naturally it would not only bring trade to Newberg but it would make it easy for those who have business in Washington county to get over the hill. And again, it would make it easy for Newberg people to take their friends to the top of the mountain where one of the most magnificent views of the valley may be obtained. Dr. Brown was the leader in the movement for putting this new road through but since he has been away the burden has fallen on Mr. Oakley and he is deserving of the hearty co-operation of those who are most interested. If the farmers out that way will take a hand in starting the movement by clearing the right of way and making fills, as Mr. Oakley suggests, we think we can safely say that Newberg will give a helping hand when there is a call for permanent work. In the meantime we hope Mr. Oakley will keep up his courage and continue to boost for the road, calling on the Graphic for publicity in the matter whenever he feels that it is needed.

Cordwood Now 'Stead of Human Load on Sub-Infested Ocean

Captain Bertram Hayes has a lighter "load" now. It's just plain old cordwood on a squeaky wheelbarrow at his farm at Newfoundland, N. J. Captain Hayes commanded the huge liner transport, the "Olympic," throughout the war period, making hundreds of trips across the submarine-infested Atlantic. He has been decorated by the British with the D. S. O. for running down and sinking a German submarine. This is the first vacation he has had since the war started in 1914. He carried thousands of soldiers and allied leaders across without the loss of a life.

THEN AND NOW

One hundred and thirty-two years ago the convention which framed our Federal Constitution completed its task. For nearly four months the convention had been at work. Its deliberations were behind closed doors. Its members were engaged in a difficult undertaking and discussions and quarrels on the outside over the proposed document would have needlessly confused and prolonged the difficulties.

In the convention sat some of the brainiest men of the day. Washington was president of the convention. Franklin, then eighty-one years of age, was there. Hamilton, with his constructive genius, was there. Seven of the delegates had been governors of states and twenty-eight had been members of Congress. Two later became Presidents of the United States and one a Vice President, and others held or were destined to hold high positions of trust and responsibility. Eight had been signers of the Declaration of Independence and some had been members of the famous Stamp-Act Congress. Among these notables James Madison stands out as the one who, perhaps more than any other, left the impress of his work upon the great document.

In all fifty-five were present. Ten delegates did not attend. Not everybody was for the Constitution. Even Richard Henry Lee who moved the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, was opposed to it. Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts helped to frame the Constitution and then would not sign it. In the same state, John Hancock and that other great patriot, Samuel Adams, did not like it. Patrick Henry wished to demand of Washington "a reason for his conduct" in promoting the Constitution. Virginia was the tenth state to ratify, little New Hampshire having beaten her by four days.

There was opposition and plenty of it. The legislature of Pennsylvania forcibly secured and held in their seats two members of the opposition in order to have a quorum while a vote on ratification was taken. That vote stood forty-five favoring the Constitution and two opposed. There were difficulties to overcome in framing the document and other difficulties in securing its ratification. But it was accomplished and the history of the past one hundred and thirty-two years declares the wisdom of the act.

How like current history and current events the discussions and the history of the above critical period read! Many of the arguments used today against the proposed League of Nations are practically identical with the arguments against the adoption of our Constitution. There were men who were fearful then; as there are today. There were those who were afraid of surrendering some State sovereignty then; there are those who fear the loss of national sovereignty today. There were those who were apprehensive that some states would have an advantage over others; and this is true today.

National affairs were chaotic then; world affairs are chaotic today. There was suspicion then; there is suspicion now. After the Constitution was really made effective, however, and people began to understand something of its purpose and meaning, suspicion was allayed and order in matters governmental and commercial was established. To the United States the Constitution was the greatest blessing of the age.

We are proud of America and the part she took in the World War. We believe that America is the greatest nation in the world today. Our responsibility is proportionate to our greatness. The strong man who rushes in and beats off the ruffian who has assailed peaceful citizens, and then abandons the bleeding ones with no further concern for their safety, has not measured up to our conception of a Good Samaritan. There was a time when we could refrain from entangling alliances with the rest of the world. That day has passed. With the means of modern communication, there can be no isolation. The greatest nation in the world cannot withdraw from the world.—Congregationalist and Advance.
