HIGH SCHOOL AGRICULTURE NOTES

The number of students taking the agriculture course has been increased considerably since the day school began.

We find that a number of boys now regret that they were not farsighted enough to register for the course at that time. It would appear that many contemplate doing so at the beginning of next semester.

The boys are being guided along lines at present that would perhaps come under the head, if given as a separate course, of "Agriculture Vocational Opportunities."

Before a boy can really decide intelligently what he desires to do even in agriculture, he must have a more or less broad, general view of the various business opportunities in agriculture.

Work of this kind is not given to any extent in the schools and colleges of agriculture at the present time. It is vry much needed—is "agriculture vocational guidance."

We gave, while with the State Institute of Applied Agriculture, Farmingdale, Long Island, New York, a course in Comparative Horticulture, wheih was, in so far as we know, the first distinct and separate vocational guidance course in agriculture given in the United States.

The boy or girl must be helped to find himself or herself. Much of the world's unhappiness is admittedly due to the fact that young folks either drift or are forced by circumstances into vocations for which they are neither adapted nor fitted.

Oliver F. Kilham,
Director Agriculture Department,
Newberg High School.
