

A correspondent recommends the following simple remedy for headache—sick headache particularly. Cut a lemon in half and squeeze the juice into a tumbler. Add a few—very few grains of sugar, and fill the glass nearly three-quarters full of cold water. Now stir in half an eggspoonful of ordinary baking soda. This will fix up, of course, and the draught must be swallowed during effervescence.

If one does fail to relieve headache, repeat it three hours after. Taken fasting, the first thing in the morning, it will do much to settle the stomach after the sick headache, and probably prevent its recurrence for some time to come. This kitchen physic has prevailed when phenacetin and other nerve-quieters have signally failed to do so.

Teach Child Courtesy.

Good manners in children as well as grown people are the expression of an innate consideration for the rights, privileges and opinions of other people.

Years of experience have crystallized this feeling into certain conventional forms of expression, which every child should be taught. The little habits of courtesy, which should be a part of every day life, are really the "outward and visible sign of an inward grace." Few acquisitions are more valuable to anyone than that charm of manner which wins the immediate regard of everyone with whom they come into contact.

One at a Time.

One Saturday afternoon two girl friends and I boarded a crowded street car. We managed to get to the front of the car. As we didn't care to hang to the straps, we held to each other's arms. I was standing next to a seat which was occupied by a man and a woman. The car gave a sudden jerk and I fell into the man's lap, pulling my friends with me, while the man said in a surprised tone, "Never mind pulling the others; one is enough." Everybody roared. O death, where is thy sting!—Chicago Tribune.

Comparison.

"I believe in free speech!" exclaimed the vociferous man.
"So do I," rejoined Uncle Bill Bottletop; "so do I. But in one respect free speech reminds me of the free lunch in the old days.—You hate to see a man making a pig of himself just because something's free."

Anatomy Among the Ancients.

It has been pointed out that the statues and plaques carved in stone and wood to be seen in the Gizeh museum prove that the priest mummifiers of Memphis 6,000 years ago possessed a profound knowledge of anatomy. Science, therefore, as Lockyer remarked, is as old as art, and they have advanced together.

Another remarkable fact in this connection is that excavations in Italy have brought to light scores of finely finished surgical instruments for certain operations, which are in almost every particular of form like those reinvented in modern times and used by the most advanced surgeons of today.
