AGRICULTURE NOTES

1. "The chief lesson in life is that industry, application and intelligence combined are necessary to success, and that some sacrifice of our natural inclination to take things easy is necessary if we want to accomplish anything. Those who wish to take things easy do not need any education to do it."

2. "When both father and mother have the time and surplus energy to devote to the joy of living, as well as to making a living, the youth on the farm will see the independence of rural life and that all that goes with it has much to attract."

3. "With economic freedom comes quickly social equality."

4. One step in advance for the farmer was made when Hon. E. T. Meredith was made Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture.

5. Secretary Meredith is a long-headed business man with not only back bone to enable him to adhere to "the truth," but also the ability to assemble facts and figures (proof) to back up requests and demands and convince Congress and others that he is right, thus getting what he goes after.

6. As farmers, each individual among us must have somewhat of this Meredith ability if we would succeed. As Rabbi Stephen S. Wise says, we must "continue to think individually, but we must act collectively—co-operatively." That is the one and only solution to the farmer's present problem—intelligent, voluntary co-operation.

7. Note this: "The population of farmers in the United States as a whole is approximately 35 per cent of our total census." As farmers, our lack of economic and social class prestige would seem to be "an outstanding index of restricted employment of power in rural social organization."

8. The farmer is a "manufacturer of foods in bulk, comparable with the manufacturer of cotton cloth" or any other product.

9. As a class we as farmers must organize for co-operative purposes that our collective power may be used that justice may be had for producer, dealer and consumer. The responsibility rests with us absolutely, and we cannot do other than shoulder it and "make good."

10. Did we say the farmer was a "manufacturer?" Read this: "The export business in agricultural products (of the United States) in 1919 constituted approximately 55 per cent of all exports." The total agricultural exports amounted to the enormous sum of $4,250,000,000.

11. We must have the forward look. We must realize that our present and future prosperity depends in large measure upon foreign markets. We must encourage anything and everything looking toward bigger and better markets of this kind. Total dependence upon local consumption (consumption in the U. S. A.) will always mean over production and consequent low prices to the farmer.

12. As a class we must be better business men. We must avail ourselves, either individually or through our organizations, of all possible sources of information as to market conditions. This data is necessary to success.

13. The United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Markets, located at Washington, D. C., has agents all over our country and the world gathering facts and figures. Mr. Farmer, that you and I may use for analysis.

14. We, as business men, must have at our disposal certain deductions and conclusions drawn from analysis of said facts and figures. Then, and then only, are we in a position collectively and individually to approximately determine what our future immediate business policy will be.

15. Somebody says: "Fiddle! those dry old figures mean nothing to me. I can't make head nor tail out of them." We repeat—They must be interpreted truthfully for the farmer, by some one, if he is ever to come into his own where dollars and cents are concerned, which really means, socially, to.

16. The banker must do it and does it daily. So does the manufacturer. So does every capable and successful business man. Until the farmer or his agent does it, the farmer as a business man is inefficient. Send a postal to Washington and get "The Market Reporter."

17. We would ask from Newberg farmers, through the Graphic, for expression of opinions as to the desire for, and feasibility of, organizing "The Newberg, Oregon, Farmers Club." Newberg is known as a "farmers' town." Newberg farmers should take a keen interest in the civic and municipal affairs of said town.

18. The club would be organized this summer, and would be primarily for the consideration and discussion of farm management and general municipal improvement matters. Will you not think it over, and give us the benefit of your opinion?

STOCK NOTES FROM THE CARLTON SENTINEL

Ed Cary, of Carlton, Oregon's noted Jersey breeder, has returned during the last few days from a trip to Eastern points, where he attended a number of important cattle sales. At Lowell, Massachusetts, Mr. Cary purchased a young Jersey bull and five heifers, for which he paid approximately $2,000.

C. H. Graves lost one of his valuable registered Jersey cows recently, its death resulting from the lodging in its heart of a piece of wire, sharp at both ends, which the cow had swallowed. He performed a post-mortem and found the wire completely buried in the heart. He believes the cow got the wire in her feed. She lived for more than a month after swallowing the wire.

Sixty Million Chairs Made.
 Sixty million chairs have been manufactured in Gardner, Mass., since the industry was first established in that town, a century ago.
