LETTER WRITING IN THE DAYS OF NEBUCHADNEZZAR

Letters written by King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon some 3,000 years ago have recently turned up in the Yale Babylonian collection, and have been translated by Professor Albert T. Clay, curator of the Babylonian section at Yale.

Nebuchadnezzar wrote his letter in a lordly tone, and his epistles convey "the word of the king" to the chief of the temple of the god Marduk concerning the jurisdiction of temple matters. Before being sent, a Babylonian letter was placed in a nice flat clay envelope. A lot of loose sand was then shaken in around the letter to protect it from scraping against the inside of the envelope and thus obliterating the message. The top was sealed with hot clay and stamped with the signet set in the sender's ring.

Many of the Babylonian letters show that they were incased, and not a few bear the seal impressions and the remainder of envelopes still adhering to them. Few of the letters were actually dated, and the senders of some cannot be determined, having probably been sent by the hand of a family slave, and the name of sender was therefore not a necessary adjunct.—Detroit News.

"Lillian," said mother, severely, "there were two pieces of cake in the pantry this morning, and now there is only one. How does this happen?" "I don't know," said Lillian regretfully. "It must have been so dark that I didn't see the other piece."—Detroit Free Press.
