TOOK TIME TO DO THINGS

In "Ox-Cart Days" Men of Genius Did
Their Literary Work. Leisurely, and Well.

How did they do it, those old fellows? Take a novel by Thackeray, for example. It is monumental. Looks as if one of them would be a life work. The mere penning of it appals a modern man. Yet Thackeray turned out volume after volume as if time and energy were interminable. And his work was practically perfect. No slovenliness, no carelessness, no haste, no guess-this-will-do-ness. Today we have every accessory to speed, every time-saving device, all knowledge classified and compendiumed and stored in convenient libraries. But where are the Thackerays? Or the Goethes, Dickenses, Hugos and Baines?

Men of their day were compelled to waste time. A journey of a few miles took all day, or several days. A dinner involved sitting up all night and drinking one's self under the table. A message to a friend was not a ten-word telegram, but a beautifully penned and excellently expressed essay. Such letters were preserved and handed down. Later they were put into print. How many letters have you written which will be handed down? And how would you like to have the best letter you ever wrote put into print? Chances are that if you write more than two pages you apologize. And you sign it, "Yours hastily."

The men of the ox-cart days did things thoroughly and well. In the days of the wireless, we "have no time."—Lynn (Mass.) Item.

NEW YORK GOAL OF PILGRIMS

Their Original Intention Was to Found a Colony There, but Plans
Were Frustrated.

The Pilgrim Fathers might have founded New York if it had not been for the bribing of the Mayflower skipper by the Dutch, who persuaded him to keep the Pilgrims from the mouth of the great river, which they planned to settle with a colony of their own. The ancient charter of the Pilgrims gave them land which probably included New York. The patent was granted to them after they fled from the Virginia company. This grant was not exactly the instrument the Pilgrims wanted, because of its religious provisions. The Pilgrims wished to get a patent that would permit them the fullest liberty of worship, but the king refused to give them a charter in which a definite stipulation of religious freedom was contained. So they were forced to content themselves with the Virginia patent. It being suggested by their sympathizers that in the wilderness they would probably not be disturbed.

Little Known of Frogs

Along the rivers and streams in some parts of Texas, and around the margins of ponds and lakes, we meet with great beds of the water hyacinth, says the American Forestry Magazine. Their delicate white flowers and dark green leaves present a picture of floral luxuriance not very easily forgotten. Where they grow, one should be on the lookout for various species of reptiles or batrachians, and their habits and appearances in nature carefully observed. We know very little about some of the forms, and science will welcome any new facts in regard to them. Some of the frogs and toads, for example, are not only very rare in collections, but we are practically lacking in any field notes upon their exact distribution and habits.

Modern Cereals Superior

The wheat and barley of today are much larger and finer grains than the wheat and barley which have been found in ancient Egyptian tombs and in the buried cities of Greece. As for rice, which feeds more than one-third of the human race, there are now a number of varieties (developed chiefly by the Japanese) which are far superior to any that were known even half a century ago.

All of our grains, excepting maize, seem to have originated in southern Asia. Consumption of rice, the great Asiatic cereal, is now growing rapidly in the United States, most of our people having learned only recently to appreciate it, and how to prepare it for the table.
