OREGON'S SUPREMACY

Do you realize that you are living in earth's greatest paradise and that here in the Willamette valley you have a combination of natural wealth unequalled anywhere in the country? Have you heard of the wonderful attractions of some distant place and felt a longing to see it and analyze for yourself its wonders and its advantages? Do not let any of these things overshadow the enjoyment of your own country, for you may search the country over and find no place more beautiful, no place with a more salubrious climate, no place with more natural advantages or wealth of products.

Southern California boasts of her climate and of her productivity, but she is surrounded by barren hills and her beauties are all man made and are maintained only by the hand of man. Oregon with her green clad hills and her carpeted fields and pastures—all the work of nature herself—far surpasses the highly esteemed and widely advertised Los Angeles country. Our fruits are more juicy and far meatier and of better size and flavor; our flowers are more sweet scented; our birds sing with a far happier lilt; our air is more pure; our natural scenery more beautifully set. In fact we excel her in almost every way and perhaps, if we could only arouse the public of the country at large to an appreciation of our resources and our native wealth, we would enjoy as great a reputation as does our rival state of the south.

As a resident of the state of Minnesota, we remember full well our impressions of this great western country. We remember that when we informed our friends that we were coming to Oregon to live, that almost without exception they demonstrated with us for casting our lot in a country where there was nothing but rain, and advised us to go to California. Not that any of them had ever been to either state, but they were merely reciting what Californians had told them. There is no use denying that Oregon gets more than her share of the country's rainfall, and to some people this may be objectionable. But where would be our wonderful greenclad hills, our luscious fruit, and all, or nearly all, of the great natural scenic and commercial advantages, were it not for this abundant rainfall. It is not a liability; it is an asset and a very valuable asset.

We should come to look upon the rains of Oregon as a blessing and not as an affliction. We should advertise this side of our climate in the light of its advantages and not allow our competitors to malign that which is giving us our very best things. We wonder if anyone who is reading this has ever been forced to spend a considerable number of years in a desert country where they were denied the blessings of abundant rainfall, with its cooling effect, with its clarifying of the atmosphere, with its accompanying invigoration of health. If they have they are in a position to appreciate to the full our feeling in regard to the Oregon rains.

Let us boost this Oregon advantage as well as her others and instead of apologizing for her rainfall, count it as one of our best assets. Let us advertise to the world our supremacy and not allow the impression to exist that we are in any sense inferior to California or any other section of the country. We have a wonderful climate; a wonderful country; wonderful scenery and wonderful products and we should let the world know about them. We haven't a single disadvantage which is not common to these other sections and we have many advantages which they do not possess. We should feel no hesitancy about telling these facts to the world in any possible way.

TWO GOOD MOVES

Two steps in the right direction have been made by the new administration at Washington, at least. These are the budget law and the postoffice ruling under which all applicants for postmaster must pass a civil service examination. Both of these are in the interests of efficiency and economy. Under the budget law, all departments will be put on a more businesslike basis and useless expense will be eliminated and it is about time that such a step should be taken. There is an endless amount of waste in connection with the administration of our national government and when the budget plan is put into full operation much of this waste will be stopped.

The postoffice ruling mentioned above is also a mighty good move for it takes the postmaster out of politics to a greater extent and makes their selection on a basis of qualifications and fitness rather than upon patronage. The nation will hail with joy such evidences of common sense applied to our government.

TAKE STOCK

In his campaign for economy in the Government service, Gen. Dawes has ordered every bureau to make an inventory of its office equipment and hand over to the General Supply Committee all articles of furniture, typewriters, etc., that it has no immediate use for. Future purchase of new supplies will be prohibited so long as the committee is able to fill requisitions from the stocks on hand. Many thousands of dollars will be saved by the new rules. Heretofore it has been the practice of bureau chiefs in need of equipment to buy the stuff in the outside market, with little regard to what the government might have on hand in the shape of second hand goods. Great storehouses have been kept filled with slightly used equipment that has rapidly deteriorated and been finally sold at auction at prices far below the original price. Gen. Dawes has decreed an end to the extravagant practice.

Every newspaper man is familiar with the expression, "But don't use my name." It is the finish of nearly every article sent to the editor in which the writer wishes to have some person, organization, official, or group criticized for what he or they have or have not done. It is common custom with many people to ask the newspaperman to do that which they would not for a moment consider doing themselves and yet they feel very badly if the newspaperman refuses to pull their chestnuts out of the fire for them. Please remember, if you are tempted to send your newspaper a communication, which you would not be willing to have appear over your name, that the chances are ten to one that the editor of the paper feels the same way about it, and don't feel badly should he not publish your communication.

JITNEYS FIGHT LICENSE

The demurrer in the case of the City of Hillsboro vs. C. L. Wise and R. W. Burdett was argued before City Recorder McCormick Saturday by City Attorney Bowman and John F. Logan and was overruled. The defendants are auto bus drivers arrested by Chief Larson for failure to pay the monthly license fee imposed by the city ordinance. The next step in the proceedings will be the trial of the two drivers in the recorder's court, after which, in case of conviction, Mr. Logan intimated that the case would be appealed to the circuit court. The object is to test the constitutionality of the ordinance, more particularly as to the fee charged, which the attorney holds is exorbitant and higher with one exception than collected anywhere in the state. The ordinance which is under fire was adopted after the drivers had disregarded previous attempts to regulate them. It provides for a fee of $5 a month and follows the Portland ordinance in making a distinction between forhire cars used only occasionally and cars driven in and out of the city on regular routes. Since its adoption the drivers have been paying regularly, but when the last quarter became due refused. Mr. Logan holds that amendments to the state license law adopted by the last legislature limit the city to collecting but a nominal fee, but he is understood to have admitted that nothing can be done to prevent collection of the present until next January, when the law becomes effective.
