VACATIONS

There is an old saying that all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy. There is a great amount of truth in this. And the wise man of affairs so plans his life that he will have the play days to break the monotony of the work routine. In this day of rapid living the rest and recreation times are even more essential, than they were in the days of our forefathers when life assumed a more placid effort. The successful man today must think quickly and act with precision. He must be alert and alive. In the vernacular of the day, he must have lots of pep.

Constant drain upon the faculties with which nature endows mankind leaves him fagged and fatigued to the point where he cannot make the best use of his faculties and retain that enthusiastic demeanor which goes so far toward creating success for him. But break the monotony of every day grind with a short vacation period and you have vitality renewed and pep restored. It is in full realization of this fact that the great men of the country take their annual vacations and their shorter and more frequent days off. It is in acknowledgment of this truth that in many large cities the half-holiday is granted to office employees to enable them to get away from their week-day cares and allow them to get out into the open country and relax. It was in supreme, divine recognition of this truth that God gave mankind the Sabbath day of rest.

The summer time of the year is always the play time and so we see each year in increasing numbers, people taking their vacations at the beaches and in the mountains. Getting away from man-made cities to the God-made country. Wishing to lose sight of the buildings erected by the hands of man and gaze with admiration upon the temples of God—the hills, the sea, the forests, the rivers, etc. But summer time is drawing to a close and playtime is almost over. Soon it will be time to resume the winter period and if we cannot point back to that play time with a knowledge that we have profited physically, mentally and spiritually, then it has failed to achieve its real purpose. If we do not come to our work with a greater zest and a freer will because we have enjoyed good wholesome play, but instead are tired and fagged out with an overexertion which bespeaks ill-calculated and poorly planned vacation, then we have really gained little.

Vacation should be restful and recreational. It should be spent in calm retreat rather than amid the crowds at resorts. Oregon is the vacation spot of the nation. Her natural scenic advantages are great and one does not have to travel thousands or even hundreds of miles to enjoy the most beautiful scenery and the most ideal surroundings for vacation purposes. The people should make more general use of these resources.

"What a wonderful country we have," are the words of anyone who rides around over the country in this vicinity and views the beautiful hills and fertile lands hereabouts. One cannot help but feel that way when they see the marked evidences of it on every hand.

The newly completed highway to the south will add greatly to the natural advantages enjoyed by the rich Dundee district. One has only to drive over this stretch of road and view the fine orchards to realize the wealth that lies in the red hills.

Someone has asked us why there was no answer to the recent editorial of the Telephone-Register in our last issue. Well, the T-R said "enough" and we could see no further use in prolonging the stench, so we quit prodding.

Booze and gasoline won't mix. Several recent accidents have proven this and yet there seems to be one born every minute as usual.

Forest Resounds With Wails

South American countries have many specimens of the fox tailed monkey. That little animal has the peculiar habit of uttering loud cries, as though in pain, during the hour before sunrise and for an hour following sunset, the forests at such times resounding with the monkey wailing.

DAIRY

MILK PRODUCED FOR MARKET

Monthly Reports Show Wide Variation
Through Year—Cost in Winter Is Quite High.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture)

In winter the cost of feed, bedding and pasture amounts to 80 per cent of the yearly cost of producing milk in a typical Vermont dairy section, while in summer it amounts to 15.9 per cent. Specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture found as a result of a study covering two years in a section of that state where milk was produced for market. The report of this study is now published in Department Bulletin 923, "Unit Requirements for Producing Milk in Vermont." While the figures obtained show the requirements of producing milk in that particular section, and may be approximate of the requirements in similar sections, the specialists point out that they do not apply to dairy sections where other conditions and methods of management prevail.

It was found that 31.1 pounds of concentrates were required to produce 100 pounds of milk in winter, while to produce the same amount in summer only 8.7 pounds were necessary. Other requirements for producing this amount of milk in winter were: Hauling and grinding concentrates, 2 cents; dry roughage, 129.9 pounds; silage and other succulent roughage, 191.3 pounds; bedding, 11.2 pounds; man labor, 2.7 hours; horse labor, 0.6 hour; other costs, 55.5 cents.

In summer the unit requirements for producing 100 pounds of milk other than concentrates were: Hauling and grinding concentrates, 0.5 of a cent; dry roughage, 18.7 pounds; silage and other succulent roughage, 27.8 pounds; pasture, 0.1 of an acre; man labor, 2 hours; horse labor, 0.4 hour; other costs, 42.5 cents.

In one year it was found that 1,030 pounds of concentrates were required to keep a cow. Other requirements were: Hauling and grinding concentrates, 61 cents; dry roughage, 3,600 pounds; silage and other succulent roughage, 5,307 pounds; bedding, 263 pounds; pasture, 3 acres; man labor, 123 hours; horse labor, 24.1 hours; other costs, covering interest taxes and similar items on the dairy's share of buildings and equipment, but not including management, $25.36. It was determined that the dairy's share of the total investment in buildings, equipment and herd amounted annually to 11.5 per cent of the total inventory value.

GROOM COWS AFTER MILKING

Dust and Germs Prevented From Contaminating Milk Supply—Do All Work Between Times.

The cows should not be groomed, bedded, or fed immediately before milking. This fills the air with dust and germs which get into the milk and contaminate the milk. The grooming is as good for the cows as good bedding, but do it during the day when ample time will be left before the next milking to allow the dust to settle.

Benefits of Silage.
Silage keeps the cattle in good physical condition. The hair is always oily and velvety, the hide is loose and pliable. The acids and juices of ensilage aid digestion.

Balanced Ration Essential.
It is just as essential for the dairy cow to be fed a liberal well-balanced ration as it is for the working man to get a good meal of well selected food.

Duck-Laying Season.
The duck-laying season generally ends with the last of August.

A Suit Is Started

R. C. Braden vs. Charles Wiley of Tillamook is a suit for $300 damages by reason of negligence alleged against Wiley in that on August 20th, at Sheridan, Wiley is alleged to have driven on the wrong side of the road and smashed the car of Braden in the resultant collision of the cars. B. A. Kilks is attorney for plaintiff.
