UMPQUA CAPITAL WILL LOSE SAM TAYLOR TO NEWBERG

Fightin "Jeb" Stuart never burned the long wooden bridge over the Juniata river near Mount Union, Pa.

Samuel W. Taylor was one of the reasons why.

Sergeant Taylor has been commander of the Old Soldier's Home at Roseburg since October 1, 1919, but has resigned, and on November 1 will leave the Umpqua metropolis for his little country home near Newberg.

It was when Taylor was 15 years old that he joined Captain William W. Wallace's company, hastily formed to keep the Confederate cavalrymen from burning the Pennsylvania railroad bridge near Mount Union. This was a part of Lee's plan in the invasion of the Keystone empire, and Mr. Taylor declares the fight for the crossing was the first Civil War bloodshed Pennsylvania had known.

"Twenty-seven of us attacked Jeb Stuart's 2500 men coming up the mountain," Taylor explained, "and we went after those Johnnies hammer and tongs. They thought we were the advance guard for a much larger force, so they stopped, and after we had killed a number of them, they retreated. We saved the bridge, which was greatly needed by General Mead's forces. I have always been proud of the fact that I was one of the 27 who turned the trick."

The former sergeant explained that each of these men received the thanks of the Pennsylvania railroad, but no annual passes.

It was on July 13, 1863, that young Sam Taylor enlisted in the Union army from Huntington county, Pa. (July 13 is a famous date at Roseburg.) He had previously volunteered only for special duty for the Mount Union fight. Taylor was mustered in at Harrisburg as a private in Troop B, 13th Pennsylvania cavalry, Colonel Michael Kerwin commanding.

In spite of his collection of thirteens, this soldier went through the Civil war without being scratched or without being sick a day.

The outfit Taylor joined was called the "Irish Dragoons," and became a part of the famous old fighting regiment. This batallion was composed chiefly of Pennsylvania Irishmen.

Fifteen-year-old Sam Taylor and his comrades joined the regiment at Culpeper, and from then on he saw enough battling to satisfy him. His troop went into the fight at Sulphur Springs on the morning of October 13 with 66 men and two officers. They were surrounded, and when the battle ended only five men and one sergeant remained; most of the others had been captured, but young Taylor was able to keep out of the hands of the Virginians.

Taylor fought throughout the remainder of the war in the Army of the Potomac, Phil Sheridan being his corps commander. These mounted sharpshooters were in battle after battle, but the young Pennsylvanian dodged all the bullets that whizzed his way.

The boy was made a corporal after a time, and then soon was proudly wearing the three stripes of a sergeant. He was made a sergeant when only 16 years old. He was mustered out at Rawleigh, N. C.

Sam W. Taylor moved to Oregon in 1889, and settled in Eugene. He toiled for the Eugene water works for 20 years, and was treasurer of Lane county eight years.

When he bids farewell to the romantic capital of Douglas county, he will move to his five-acre tract in the Chehalem valley, near the homey little city of Newebrg. Sergeant Taylor is a member of Sumner post, G. A. R. of Portland, and a past department commander of Oregon. He is one of the youngest G. A. R.s in the state and good for many a battle yet.—Portland Telegram.

Next meeting is on the 16th of December.

C. C. Elliott has been confined to his bed on account of having a small piece of steel removed from one of his lower limbs. There were eight stitches taken after Dr. Hester made the incision in removing the offending article. Mr. Elliott had carried this piece of steel for years as the result of an accident while working in the timber at one time. His many friends and neighbors are glad to know that he is getting along all right after the operation.
