STRYCHNINE-BARLEY DIET GETS GROUND SQUIRRELS

Killing ground squirrels in Oregon with strychnine mixed in barley or oats has been found by experiment station tests to be the cheapest and most effective way of combatting the pest by Oregon farmers. Between a teaspoonful and a tablespoonful of the bait, forms the appetizing but fatal meal for the animal.

Because strychnine doesn't deteriorate rapidly as does cyanide it is much safer to use than phosphorus. Usually a biologic survey assistant or county agent in one of the Oregon counties mixes poison and sells it at a reasonable price.

The variety of squirrel as well as weather and other conditions determines the mixture and strength of the poison. One quart of poison is usually sufficient for from 40 to 60 baits.

The person spreading the "squirrel killer" may travel either on horseback or on foot. The former method is most used because it often takes less time.

NOT AN ARMORY BUT A COMMUNITY BUILDING

Evidently the editor of the Yamhill Record has a wrong impression of the type of building which the American Legion proposes to build here judging by an item in their last issue, which is as follows:

"The Newberg post American Legion is preparing to build an armory in that city. They must have forgotten that they already have an armory in McMinnville."

Newberg has no guard unit and the new building will not be used as an armory but rather as a club and community building.
