

JOKE ON ARCHITECT

Inside Story of Statue on Home of Vanderbilt.

Son of Builder Says Figure of Tired Mason on Fifth Avenue Mansion Was Joke on and Tribute to His Father.

New York.—New Yorkers who thronged Fifth avenue last fall to get a glimpse of the Broadway dandy, the deposed Baechante, the bride's dollar mark and other curious sculptures and carvings that adorn stately St. Thomas' church, missed one of the avenue's oldest architectural jests.

For more than three decades, it became known today, the figure of a tired mason has rested and sunned himself on the roof of the old W. K. Vanderbilt mansion at Fifty-first street, within a stone's throw of St. Thomas', gazing down at the fashionable equipages and richly clad crowds that flowed through the famous thoroughfare.

The few architecturally inclined persons who knew of the existence of the Vanderbilt mason believed that the figure was erected as a tribute to a mason who was killed during the construction of the house, but Richard Hunt, architect, who with his late father, Richard Hunt, Sr., built the house, said the figure was at once a joke on and a tribute to the senior Hunt.

"The Vanderbilt home," said Mr. Hunt, "was built during the transition period, when it was customary to adorn the roof with a sculptured figure of some sort. The masons and sculptors were continually after my father to tell them what kind of figure he planned to use, but he kept putting them off, saying there was plenty of time to decide after the house was finished.

"Finally, when walking through the nearly completed building my father observed a screen in the large hallway, and directed the workmen to remove it. Behind the screen was a sculptor—Kipson, quite well known at that time—putting the finishing touches on a study of a mason at rest, with his square paper cap on his head and a mallet in his hand. He had used as his model my father, who frequently put on a mason's cap and took an active part in the work.

"Mr. Vanderbilt liked the figure—and that's how it happened that the mason was put up."

The only other figure of an artisan gracing a wealthy home in New York, so far as could be learned, is a heroic statue of a steel puddler, which stands on the lawn before the Charles M. Schwab mansion on Riverside drive. Mr. Schwab was a steel puddler himself before he was "discovered" by the late Andrew Carnegie.

DO THE PEOPLE WANT THE TREES. ASKS RECORD

The sentiment which prompts the desire to plant trees along the paved highway is commendable, but there are some aspects of the case which do not seem to have been considered. After a few years such trees would not only litter the pavement with leaves, but would render farm land joining the road unproductive for a distance of from fifty to one hundred feet. Very little will grow in the shade of trees or in ground from which the roofs absorb the moisture. This is not all. There is an immense amount of tilling laid along the road and in time the roots from these trees would grow into and under the tilling, rendering it useless for drainage. Farmers cannot afford to lose the use of this land and the state certainly cannot afford to have the drainage stopped.

If changing the name of the road and planting trees meant anything to the ex-service men it might, but it does not; the pavement was not put down in memory of their services and calling it the Memorial highway was only an after thought. It would be much better to change the name of Mt. Hood to Memorial mountain. That will undoubtedly remain intact for a million years.—Yamhill Record

If you could sit in the Graphic office week after week and hear people tell of the splendid results they get from Graphic advertising you'd be convinced too that Graphic advertising pays.

PRIZE FOR BRITISH MUSEUM

Institute Presented by Sir Rider Haggard With Ring Taken From Peruvian Mummy.

A ring with a romantic history has recently been presented to the British museum by Sir Rider Haggard. He first saw it 57 years ago, attached to the watch chain of the headmaster of his preparatory school, who had received it from a friend who had traveled much in America. The friend's story was that while traveling in Peru he had opened a gravemound in which he found a stone table with 13 mummified figures seated round it. On the finger of the principal figure was this ring, which the discoverer withdrew; and the bodies, according to his story, crumbled into dust.

It was the legend attached to this ring which, according to Sir Rider Haggard, first turned his imagination toward the invention of stories of adventure; and readers of "King Solomon's Mines" will recognize in it the origin of a striking episode in that book. Fifty-five years after he first saw the ring it still remained vividly in Sir Rider Haggard's memory, and he described its appearance in a story which is now on the eve of publication. Shortly after he had done so, he chanced to renew acquaintance with his former schoolmaster's family, and made inquiries about the ring, of which he eventually became the possessor, and he has now given it to the British museum.

FISH THAT SWALLOW STONES

Antarctic Seals and a Certain Species of Whale Need Them to Aid in Digestion.

Stones are commonly found in the stomach of the crab-eating seal of the Antarctic seas; and it is believed they, with a certain amount of grit, are scooped up with the crustacea from the bottom of the sea. The emperor penguin, on the other hand, shows an instinctive craving for stones for gizzard-grinding purposes, and these stones must be assiduously sought, since these birds never rest upon dry land, but only upon ice.

Another unexpected name in this list of stone-swallowers is that of the Lesser Rorqual. This is a "baleen" whale, feeding upon minute crustacea, and fish. From the peculiar method of feeding which is, so to speak, forced upon this animal, it is unlikely that any portion of its food is scooped up from the sea-floor; hence the pebbles found in its stomach must be deliberately swallowed, and it is supposed, for the purpose of digestion, or, rather, of trituration. They are hardly likely to be derived from the fish which are engulfed, for these are mostly herring.

Spider Outdone by Man.

Romance in business? Of course there is. As soon as we think of foreign trade we get the glamor and thrill of it; and to Joseph Pennell's eyes a giant crane or a viaduct or a steel mill is a picture. But who of us ever thought of romance in connection with wire rope?

John Kimberly Mumford has not taken wire for granted. In "Outspanning the Spider," he has told the story of an amazing industry in a fashion to rival the fictionist. Let a single passage speak:

"Seven one-thousandths, three one-thousandths, one one-thousandth—one record after another was passed.

"At last a wire was drawn that measured one four-thousandths of an inch in diameter—twelve times finer than the hair on your head."

The spider, so long counted a master workman, had been outdone.—Nation's Business.

Let the Graphic sell it for you. If
