WHAT OF IT?

The Literary Digest has constituted itself a bureau of investigation to ascertain the public's views on prohibition and the soldiers' bonus questions. It would appear from the polls which they are taking that sentiment over the country is rather well divided upon the questions. In the case of prohibition there is no great percentage favoring a repeal of the Volstead law but there is a rather large vote in favor of beer and light wines. What possible good such a referendum can do, we fail to see. The American people with their eyes wide open outlawed the saloon and with it all intoxicating drinks. In more than two-thirds of the states prohibition had been voted directly by the people prior to the passage of the national law. However, the foreigner and the smart-alec bunch who are willing to take any risk for the sake of having their booze have made so much fuss and have been so conspicuous that they have led so reliable and stable a magazine as the Literary Digest into the fallacy of conducting a poll on the subject. To date some 450,000 people have responded to questionnaires sent out. However, this does not prove anything for the average thinking citizen considers the question a closed issue and does not take the trouble to respond.

On the soldiers' bonus question there is probably as little to be gained as on the other, for the question propounded was in such a nature as to draw out the negative vote. In this vote there is about a fifty-fifty showing of sentiment with a slight lead registered by the negative voters. In Ohio this week C. A. Thompson, the avowed dry candidate, piled up a big lead over his opponent for the republican gubernatorial nomination. This should be taken as a real indication of sentiment for it is the direct voice of all of the people of one of the great states. It is even more important when it is considered that the victory was achieved in the face of repeated victories by the so-called progressive element in other states and the backing of Harding in this case.

The fact remains that the United States has by constitutional amendment outlawed all intoxicating liquors and there is no great sentiment for their return. Beer and light wines constituted the great bulk of the old saloon business and they will never be reinstated. California will vote on an enforcement act this year and although California has always voted wet in the past, it is freely predicted that this state will adopt the enforcement act by a good majority. Prohibition is a success and although there are numerous violations, when compared with the old wide open days the consumption is small. Someone has said that if the old saloon days were to be brought back or if even light wines and beer were brought back, we would not be able to control the auto accidents and travel on the highways would be almost impossible. This is probably true for when reason departs as it does under influence of liquor, man is not capable nor responsible and the conditions even now are had enough in this respect.

What does this poll indicate? We cannot see that it indicates much of anything except another last effort of the wets to fool the public into the belief that they are coming back. It is a vain effort, however.

Someone felt it their duty to decorate the windows of the various business houses on First street with small signs of a religious nature recently. These were stuck on the outside of the windows and were anything but attractive. The consequence was that the merchants were put to a considerable trouble to get them off. We do not know what motives may have actuated the deed, nor does that enter into the question. The store windows are the personal property of the merchants and should be held inviolate by the public. They are not for bill posting or sign posting except with the consent of the owners. We have no quarrel to pick with the utterances of these stickers which were put up recently, but we do object to having an unsightly sticker pasted on our windows without our consent and shall join with the other merchants in taking steps to prevent occurrences of this sort.

-And While the Wife Pulled the Plow

It's common in many European countries even today to see women in the fields pulling the plow.

But husbands think more of wives, and men more of mothers, here in America—and out of that fact has grown the Family Laundry Service we offer.

Here are the details of this service: Every week, at a set time on set days, we call for your entire family washing; then we wash everything in cleansing, feathery suds and rainsoft water; slowly iron the flat work; fluffily dry bath towels, underwear, etc., so they can be immediately used—and leave for you only the ironing of those things which most women insist on finishing themselves.

Put it up to us to demonstrate. Telephone today and we will call.
