Newberg is becoming a regular Mecca to easterners. We were happy to receive into fellowship Brother and Sister Hays, lately located here from Florence, Kansas. Among many other visitors from a distance was Sister Little, who with Mr. Little, is from Moscow, Idaho, looking for a suitable location. We are proud of the far reaching appeal of our city and happy that we are able to be ministering here and thus enabling those of the church elsewhere to find a home with us.

About 175, in round figures, were present at the evening service, a fact which should encourage all who love the work of the church. August is considered a poor month for church attendance but if this figure is representative for all churches for last Sunday Newberg made a most creditable showing. Mr. Phillips spoke on "The Trustworthy Book" giving some reasons why we can, and why we should, accept the word of scripture as final in all matters pertaining to salvation. He dwelt upon the fact that the Bible is perfect, as it is errorless. It is powerful in that it produces hope, salvation and perfection. It is God's own revelation to man through the prophets and finally by Jesus Christ whom we should hear. God commands it. His word is eternal and will judge us on the last day. No nation or individual can go far wrong who is content to accept the Book without question, to think God's thoughts after Him and will to do his will for it is inspired of God to the end that the man of God may be complete. 2 Tim., 3:16. The Loyal Bereans, a young people's class in the bible school, are planning an intensive campaign to increase membership. The lessons are studies in the New Testament as to the nature, authorship, etc., of the various books. It's really worth while.

Two sermons from the Book for next Lord's day. At 11 a. m. the topic will be "That which abides." At 8 p. m. the age-old question will be propounded again, "What think ye of Christ?" is the topic. It is certain that all who come will be well repaid for their presence, for beside these two sermons there will be special music at both services.

The pastor is the happy recipient of a monetary gift from the congregation as a token of its appreciation of his work during the revival meeting. That all who had part in this may know how he feels about it, he desires to express through these columns his thanks and keen appreciation of their esteem and love, trusting that his services will always be such that he shall deserve this and many other evidences of their good will.

FREE METHODIST CAMP MEETING STARTED OFF WELL

The Free Methodist camp meeting opened in the Arnett grove just north of Newberg on Wednesday of this week. The attendance is starting off well and everything points to a very successful camp meeting. W. B. Olmsted, general missionary secretary of the Free Methodist church, from Chicago, will be here and deliver an address at 2:30 p. m. Sunday. R. H. Warren, who will be the special help at the meetings arrived Wednesday evening from Seattle. Visitors from Salem, Albany, Portland, Amity, Woodburn, Falls City and other points have already arrived and more are still coming. Ministers and laymen join in to make this camp meeting a real spiritual feast. Meetings are held morning, afternoon and evening and the public in general are invited to attend.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS SOCIAL

Mrs. Louisa P. Round, teacher of the women's class of the Friends Sunday school entertained her class at her home on south School street the evening of the 9th inst. This was the 39th wedding anniversary of Rev. George F. and Mrs. Round, although having passed the four score mark. The refreshments, consisting of ice cream and cake, were made and served by Mrs. Round's own hands and were not a whit behind the most fastidious tastes.

The occasion was a most enjoyable one. Upon the departure of the guests, everyone wished that Mr. and Mrs. Round may be spared for many returning years and their lives continue to be a benediction to their many friends.

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Loganberry Dieback
Herewith report of S. M. Zeller of the O. A. C. in reply to my request for information:

"I think the die-back of loganberries is usually due to the moisture conditions affecting canes which were down in the wet all winter and also too little moisture in the soil at the time when the canes are produced. This year some 'winter kill' has shown up in fall trained canes in sections where the winter was rather prolonged and severe. There is much evidence that the drought of last summer which was long and dry was very trying on the root systems and the effect of this would show up on the canes this year for they were laying up their store of food during that dry spell. In cases where there was too much top during the dry weather there was demand for too much water. This was usually accompanied with heavy crop requiring quantities of water by the old canes. The total of these water requirements has accentuated the drought effect. Thus, I think that a grower should use his good judgment as to thinning, basing his conclusions primarily upon the water efficiency of his soil or irrigation, respectively."

Blackcaps

It has been impossible to determine either from local growers or the agricultural college the variety of blackcaps which was reported in these columns some weeks ago as producing such heavy yields. The writer has failed so far to find another field of them in this locality except those started from this field.

With the idea in mind of getting them tried out so as to demonstrate their value I am planning to give away a few hundred plants to Farm Bureau members who request them in the next few days. There will be no plants for sale. If you want a few to try let me know at once so I may know how many to start before it is too late. Phone 3A15 after 8 p. m. Berry Project Leader.

SOUNDS GOOD

When pavements are considered as "point with pride" at the pavement on Main street in Yamhill, laid seven years ago with no high-priced state engineer to oversee the job. This pavement has withstood the heavy lumber traffic from the mills and there has never been a break in it nor a foot of it repaired within the city limits.—Yamhill Record.

IRREPRESSIBLE CLUB MEMBERS HELD FELLOWSHIP MEETING

Steven Illig came up from Portland last Friday evening to attend a gathering of the members of the Irrepressible club. This club which was formed some eighteen years ago was composed of eight boys, who met once a week in the kitchen of the M. E. parsonage. Vernon Gould was president of the club at that time. Each year for a long time the members made an effort to get together in an annual meeting. The last of these meetings was held about three years ago. There were five of the original eight members present at this year's meeting, they being: V. V. Gould, Chas. K. Hubbard, Steven Illig, Thomas R. Blaylock and Chester A. Dimond. The other members of the club are Arthur Weatherhead, who is a head professor in the University of Southern California; Hiram Smith, who is teaching in the high school at Redmond, Oregon; and Arthur Smith, who is in Portland.

The meeting was held in Mr. Gould's apartments in the rear of his jewelry store and reminiscences and personal experiences occupied the evening. The passage of years revealed that some had lost some hair in the struggle for supremacy, while others still nourished luxuriant locks. The years rolled back as one after another told tales of their lives in different parts of the country and although it has been about sixteen years since the club held regular meetings, the old feeling of comradeship and good fellowship was re-established once more.

All of the eight attended some college or university and all are now holding good positions or running businesses of their own. The influence of the Irrepressible club were no doubt a potent factor in the lives of all to higher ambitions and better things in life. The club was not only a play organization but good reading, singing, etc., were good features of its early days.

At a late hour the five adjourned to the home of Chester A. Dimond where refreshments were served and where some of the wives were waiting for their wayward spouses. Here another genial hour was spent and at an early hour all voted to adjourn until another year might call together the full clan again.

FARM POINTERS

(Oregon Experiment Station)

Yield per acre is the most important factor in determining the cost of growing wheat in the big Oregon wheat belt, and it is the one over which the farmer has most control. Farm surveys by the agricultural college extension service show that wheat yielding 23 bushels per acre cost $1.23 per bushel to grow, while wheat yielding 14 bushels per acre cost $2.43 per bushel. Good seed of the right variety, early plowing, clean summer-fallow, treatment for smut control and right date and rate of planting, are given by the More experiment station as important factors influencing yield, that may be largely determined by the grower.

Fall discing of stubble reduced average yields at the Moro branch experiment station. Spring disking before early spring plowing does not pay, either. Stubble not burned in the fall aids in holding the snow and getting moisture into the soil. Burning it is likely to deplete the soil of necessary vegetable matter and ultimately cause it to run together and become more subject to washing and gully-ing.

The total increase in yield of wheat by early spring plowing of summer fallow over nine years at the Moro experiment station was 56.7 bushels per acre—a quantity equal to 2 1/2 full crops on late plowed lands.

All present commercial varieties of wheat for seed need treatment for stinking smut. For planting in dry soil the bluestone treatment is best. Seed treated with formaldehyde should be sown soon after treatment in moist soil for prompt germination.
