DEATH OF PIONEER
HENRY WILSON CORSET PAGES TO THE GREAT DISCOVERERS.

There was one of Portland's foremost citizens, a true pioneer in the field of exploration, whose life was one of adventure and discovery. His name was Henry Wilson Corset, and he was born on January 4, 1819. He grew up in a land of natural beauty and was destined to be among the great discoverers of the world.

He received his early education in Portland and then studied law. He later became a lawyer and practiced in Portland. He was a man of wide interests and was interested in the fine arts, music, and literature. He was a member of the Portland Athenaeum and was associated with many literary societies.

He was also a great lover of nature and spent much of his time in the woods and mountains. He was a good hunter and fisherman and was an expert in the art of trapping.

In 1841, he went on a trip to the Pacific Northwest, where he discovered new territories for the United States. He was a member of the Lewis and Clark Expedition and was the first white man to explore the Columbia River.

He returned to Portland in 1842 and was appointed as the first postmaster of the city. He was a member of the Oregon Territorial Legislature and was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1850.

He was a man of great courage and determination and was always ready to take on any challenge. He was a man of great vision and was always looking to the future.

He died on January 4, 1867, in his home in Portland. He was a great pioneer and was remembered for his contributions to the growth of the nation.

YASMINA TAYAB

DEATH OF PIONEER
H. WILSON CORSET PAGES TO THE GREAT DISCOVERERS.

There was one of Portland's foremost citizens, a true pioneer in the field of exploration, whose life was one of adventure and discovery. His name was Henry Wilson Corset, and he was born on January 4, 1819. He grew up in a land of natural beauty and was destined to be among the great discoverers of the world.

He received his early education in Portland and then studied law. He later became a lawyer and practiced in Portland. He was a man of wide interests and was interested in the fine arts, music, and literature. He was a member of the Portland Athenaeum and was associated with many literary societies.

He was also a great lover of nature and spent much of his time in the woods and mountains. He was a good hunter and fisherman and was an expert in the art of trapping.

In 1841, he went on a trip to the Pacific Northwest, where he discovered new territories for the United States. He was a member of the Lewis and Clark Expedition and was the first white man to explore the Columbia River.

He returned to Portland in 1842 and was appointed as the first postmaster of the city. He was a member of the Oregon Territorial Legislature and was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1850.

He was a man of great courage and determination and was always ready to take on any challenge. He was a man of great vision and was always looking to the future.

He died on January 4, 1867, in his home in Portland. He was a great pioneer and was remembered for his contributions to the growth of the nation.