FACTS STRANGER THAN FICTION.

The results of Paul Delaney's trip through Central Oregon have begun to be apparent in the Portland Journal. Articles are already printing in the new daily which are likely to make the average Central Oregon citizen open his eyes. Though these matters had been previously printed in the Oregonian by Mr. Delaney and others they are still new and fascinating and the story will bear retelling many times yet, ere the world knows it as it should.

And Mr. Delaney is right. We doubt if there is a stretch of country as large as Central Oregon on the face of the globe that possesses so many curious and interesting features. The man who lives among these many natural wonders of course sees nothing out of the ordinary about them; familiarity in this case has bred indifference. Instead of dwelling on the wonders of the country he is doubtless figuring out how many tons of hay his crop will yield, what cattle are worth, how much he can sell his timber for, and like matters. This is a good, healthy business sense, imperative to the man who would succeed, and must not be discouraged. So it remains for the outsider, who has more business freedom to enjoy, to discover and point out the many natural beauties that the inhabitant through constant familiarity passes thoughtlessly by.

Central Oregon has, first of all, a huge desert, the aridity of which, we are happy to say, will soon be a thing of the past. It has an ancient river bed that extends all the way from Nevada, and possibly to Utah, in which not a drop of water runs or has run for many centuries. It has immense caves very few of which have been fully explored, and in which ice may be seen the year round. It has the cones of extinct volcanoes, and some large craters. It has underground rivers full of fish. It has lakes galore, some of them large and of tremendous depth and without visible inlet or outlet and the water of crystalline purity. It has hot springs the equal of any, and cold spring just a little bit superior. It has perpetually snow-capped peaks that feed the biggest river in the state—the only known river in the world that is never at flood but is always at low water mark. It has millions and millions of acres of fine timber lands. And, last, it has a splendid class of citizens, whose acquaintance is desirable, but who see but do not really observe these exhaustless wonders until some stranger comes along and calls attention to them. One curiosity we cannot boast of, however, is—a railroad.

The real strength of this region lies in its native resources, but it will never be brought out until they are developed into commercial factors. It is not the possession of riches but their proper use that is important in the economy of this world. We must dig wealth from the soil and the forest. We must get it ourselves to a large degree. Those who wait for others to come and do this work for them will come to some form of disappointment. We can make ourselves rich if we will.

Silver Lake, with all its postmaster's precautions against it, had the last case of smallpox in the recent epidemic. An explanation as to how the authorities managed to keep the matter dark so long would be gratefully received by a suspicious public.

Last year D. F. Steffa instituted a contest against the desert claim of Mrs. Drake. The contest fell down because the affidavit was executed before A. C. Palmer after the expiration of his commission as United States commissioner and Mrs. Drake executed a relinquishment and the tract was scripped before another contest could be filed. Subsequently Steffa appealed from rejection of his second attempt at contest and attacked the purchase because he alleged it to have been made in the interest of the contestee and after a relinquishment that he claimed to have been a result of his first attempt to contest. A few days ago the commissioner of the general land office decided there was no virtue in his appeal inasmuch as the first paper filed lacked an essential part, not being executed before an officer qualified to administer an oath, and for that reason there was nothing that could be recognized to initiate a contest on file when the relinquishment was presented and the subsequent proceedings had.

Manager S. M. Bailey, of the Crook County Journal, is about to retire from that paper. The Wasco News has again changed hands—the fourth time in five years—Allen & Morgan being the new proprietors. The newspapers of Central Oregon are in a quite healthy state of activity.

Mrs. Frank Hodson received a letter stating that her mother was dangerously ill on Monday, and on Wednesday Frank started with his wife for the Willamette valley, to remain at the sick bed until the crisis is past.

P. S. McNutt, an attorney of Butte, Neb., left for his home on Wednesday, after spending three days in Bend. Mr. McNutt has an eagle eye focussed on our timber resources, and predicted a boom in yellow pine in the spring.

From one grain of wheat sown in the Drake field on the bank of the river below the Staats hotel 30 stalks sprang and each stalk has a full head of wheat. This remarkable yield was discovered on mowing the grain for hay last week. Last year the field was irrigated but this year it received only natural moisture delivered by nature's processes.

The slaughter of trout at the fish trap on the Deschutes river 30 miles above Bend became so notorious that Sheriff Smith was moved to come out from Prineville to investigate the offense early in the week. It is certain that he found a violation of the law there but he did not make it known whether he was able to fix the offense on any person. His visit will have the effect of ending the practice of penning fish in the traps and slaughtering them in quantities. Mrs. Smith accompanied the sheriff on this trip.

About a hundred Indians from the Warm Springs agency are drifting through Bend on their way to the Willamette valley to pick hops. About 50 have gone through in the past week and as many more are said to be on the road. Old Chief Howard and his retinue are among them. On their way back they will get a supply of huckleberries in the mountains and they have extra ponies along to carry the berries. Incidentally the Indians sell baskets, gloves, etc., of their own make. Two or three of the bucks that came into Bend this week were gloriously drunk on liquor which they said they had obtained in Prineville. The redskins will get back to the agency in two or three months.
