FRIDAY DEC. 4, 1903

These be tough times for religion in places other than Bend. Zion City itself (near Chicago) has just gone into receivers' hands and Elijah II in the person of John Alexander Dowd is cast down.

We hope the rumor that the Oregon Irrigation Company will begin active construction on a large scale in the spring is well founded. We want active development in this country and cannot have too much of it.

There was but one verdict in the recent organ case, no matter how many pieces of paper were signed by the foreman of the jury. The real verdict was delivered and read in open court and assented to by the jury in the presence of both parties to the controversy. There was no question about it. Does anybody for an instant suppose the jury would have thus assented in court to a verdict directly contrary to what it agreed to in the jury room? It is impossible.

It was a rather ghastly joke on Congressman Williamson—the appearance of his amazing letter on Moody's indictment in the very issue of his country papers that carried the news of Moody's triumphant vindication. The Bulletin was too good a friend of Mr. Williamson to make use of that letter. The Bulletin sometimes differs with people, but it fights fair, and we cannot believe Mr. Williamson's letter was intended for publication.

Now Postmaster Bancroft, of Portland, is in trouble because inspectors found his I O U's for about $900 in place of good coin of the realm in his official money box. Politics in Oregon is getting to have quite a keen edge, thank you. But every federal office holder in Oregon has ample notice that the greatest advantage will be taken of any lapse on his part and he is entitled to no sympathy if inspectors do come when he least expects them. Be virtuous and you will be happy, though lonesome.

Secretary of State Dunbar has just made a fresh compilation in pamphlet form of the election laws of Oregon, giving those in effect May 21 last. This compilation gives all laws relating to the duties and authority of the judges of election, but omits many statutes of purely local application and those relating to canvass of votes by county clerks, contests, resignations etc, which are easily found in the code and would make the pamphlet too bulky. This work is well done, as is everything under the hand of Secretary Dunbar.

The project of L. H. McCann and his associates to try for an artesian well in the northeastern part of '9-12 cannot be too highly commended. It is true that the geological structure of the country is not such as to give great promise of success, but we have no knowledge as to how deep the broken strata go and it is more than possible that the drill may go through them to the continuous sheets of rock and find water that will at least come within pumping distance of the surface. This is prospecting in an unknown field. The government should join in the project and pay part of the expense from the fund provided for such experiments. Every encouragement should be given these men in their effort to discover and make beneficial use of the native resources of the country.

Crook county is saved several hundred dollars by the decision of the authorities not to hold a special election to fill the seat vacated by Congressman Williamson when he went to Washington—in this way it saves more than its share of the cost of the extra session of the legislature. Of course the mere refusal of the political organizations to make nominations would not prevent an election, but an understanding with the governor was arrived at whereby the governor will permit the county authorities to ignore his proclamation for a special election if they choose. In this way local sentiment is permitted to govern. At the same time the counties that choose to go thus unrepresented at the special session will have no cause to resist payment of any tax levy the special session may provide for. Conditions in Grant, Klamath and Lake are the same as in Crook. It would not pay to hold a special election for a senator to serve a few days. This opinion also prevails in Clatsop and Polk which will go without full representation in the senate at the special session to meet December 21.

What possible gain to people of this locality is to come from hostile criticism and misrepresentation of the acts and purposes of the Pilot Butte Development Company? What if we do not like some of its methods? It is a business enterprise that is using its own money and promises to be by far the most important factor in development of this region. If it should fail or abandon the country, as a few seem to desire, who at Bend or in Crook county would be any better for it? No business failure benefits anybody but the receiver or assignee. This concern is not asking for help, it is not asking the people to supply funds or credit, it is not working up fake booms. Indeed, it is rather to the other extreme of conservatism. It pays its way and is making progress. It could and probably would move faster if there were not so much bushwhacking against it. It is complying with the law, none of its rights have expired, it has the strength necessary to carry its work to successful conclusion. The sensible thing for the community to do is to help along every agency of development and advancement. Everybody will be benefited by such a policy. No amount of effort expended in trying to wreck the car of progress will bring gain to any of us. It won't even cure sore head or malignant grudge.

No Politics, of Course.

The Brieflet, of Portland, edited by a nephew of Colonel E. D. Baker, Oregon's senator who was slain at the battle of Ball's Bluff, Va., thrusts its puncturing pen through the recent Moody persecution in several places in this breezy style:

On Wednesday the miserable fiasco, dignified by the name of persecution, against Malcolm Moody for rifling the United States mails ended. Born in tragedy, nourished in melodrama, it stopped short in opera bouffe. Some one, birdie dear, has blundered, and the inquisitive public are wondering what particular cog in the conspiracy when it was that failed to connect. Bruce Hermann rushes out from under cover and says he is glad at the result. He was not glad until the wires brought him the news of it. The senior senator skulks in his tent and thinks Mr. Moody escaped on a technicality. If he had seen the face of the court as he asked, "Will someone prepare a verdict of not guilty?" he would not have thought it was a technicality. And then there is the present congressman, the man who succeeded to Mr. Moody's place. What a choice bird he is! With the tooth of a reptile and the aroma of a skunk, he moves through this "exceptional episode." His man Friday, the Hon. H. S. Wilson, of The Dalles, session friend and chairman of the congressional committee, was sufficiently shown up by his honor from the bench. There is one particular in which he is ahead of "Alibi" Newt. He knew where he was on the days the indictment was being considered.
