GOOD FOR FARMING

Great Irrigation Promise in Bend Region.

JUDGMENT OF AN EXPERT

The Soil is easily Cultivated and Very Fertile--An Ample Supply of Water.

Some time ago an expert irrigation engineer, E. C. Kinney, was employed by the Deschutes Irrigation & Power Co. to examine this field and report upon the work of the company, the quality of the soil, the water supply and the general aspect of the country. Mr. Johnston wanted the judgment of a trained expert to guide him in the work of development under way here. Mr. Kinney's conclusions were presented in the following letter:

Bend, Oregon, Nov. 15th, 1904.
J. O. Johnston, Esq., General Manager--Dear Sir:--Referring to your inquiry as to the present condition of the Deschutes Irrigation & Power Company's lands and canals, after careful examination I find a very large tract of land lying on benches and broad valleys, with very moderate slopes, unusually well adapted to the easy distribution of water in the process of irrigation. The land is formed from disintegrated lava, is of fine texture and easily cultivated, and is of the same general nature of lands in Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona that bear immense crops, when properly cultivated and irrigated. It has every appearance of being very fertile and productive.

I find an extensive system of canals laid out, and partially constructed, and a large force of men and teams now working to complete the system. The canals are laid out according to the latest practice of the best irrigation engineers, and when completed will supply water in ample quantity for the irrigation of the lands in question. The amount of water in the river by measurement is many times more than you will need in the canal and therefore will be ample.

The situation of your land in the near vicinity of the great Pacific coast cities will give you at all times an abundant market, thus making the whole situation especially valuable and attractive to your company and to the settlers under it.

The situation is one of the best I have seen in traveling through Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and Arizona. I find that your employees are active and alert in their duties, and think that you have an excellent organization. Very truly yours,
E. C. KINNEY.

Mr. Kinney is a trained engineer of large experience. He laid out the city of Loraine, Ohio, and built the system of docks there. Then he was engineer of the Hannibal & Moberly railroad five years, chief engineer of the Des Moines & Northern two years and assistant chief engineer of the Union Pacific railroad several years. For 10 years past he has been chief engineer of the West Gallatin Irrigation Co. in Montana, and he has made a close study of irrigation in all the arid land states.

E. D. Kinney, employed in the engineer department of the D. I. & P. Co., is a son of the Montana irrigation expert.

GOT A FINE COUGAR.

W. P. Vandeventer's After Dinner Pastime--Panthers Prentiful.

Tuesday afternoon at 1 o'clock W. P. Vandeventer left town to look up some of his cattle over on the Tumalo. Before 4 o'clock he returned with a big cougar strapped across his horse behind the saddle. The carcass was still warm and bleeding. It weighed over 100 pounds and measured 6 feet 9 inches from tip to tip.

Vandeventer had crossed the Tumalo and turned down stream. Near the W. P. Downing place he noticed the fresh tracks of a panther. This he followed nearly a mile when Tony, his horse, saw the varmint scudding along the hillside. Vandeventer urged the horse along but the snow was pretty deep there and the crust sharp. The cougar was gaining and Vandeventer brought his rifle to bear and sent a bullet after the beast. There was no response. For a hundred yards the trail showed no blood, but soon there was plenty of it and the cougar made for shelter in a ledge of rock. Vandeventer passed around below the ledge and found the cougar, which reared up threateningly and then sank out of sight, repeating the act at short intervals. The hunter raised his gun and as the varmint's head came up above the rock let drive. The bullet entered its mouth breaking a big tooth and passing through without inflicting fatal damage.

Then there was a demonstration of fury and it would have gone hard with any creature within reach of the cougar. Then Vandeventer got in another shot that passed through the beast's head and ended the business. When he went up to get the carcass he found it gripping a rock like a vise. He also found that the first shot had pierced the panther at the root of the tail and would soon have proved fatal. Mr. Vandeventer gave the pelt, which was extra fine, to W. E. Guerin, jr.

The gun which slew this cougar has done much execution among the panthers and bears of Central Oregon. The stock is broken and tied with an old cord. It lacks many of the marks of a fashionable gaming piece but it has a great record. Some five years ago it took part in a scene that closed the career of one of the most famous grizzlies of the Cascades, for whose scalp there was a standing reward of $100. Vandeventer got the reward and the cattlemen were mighty glad to pay it, for their losses by this 1,200-pound bear had been many times that sum. One of the teeth of the old terror is a paper weight on 'The Bulletin's' editorial desk and an object of much interest.

On Monday Mr. Vandeventer ran across a cougar's trail about 12 miles east of town but he had no time to follow it. The same night Garman, the barber, swore he saw a cougar on the rocks a short distance from his house. It was early in the evening and in bright moonlight. The Triplett boys went with him afterwards to look for the animal but could not find any traces of it.

The butcher shop was completed a few days ago. Mr. Clark has charge of it.

Wilson, the Misses Marion West, Iva West, Ruth Reid, Florence McCann, Messrs C. P. Becker, J. H. Overturf, C. E. Reed and Will Wilson. Mrs. Jones acted as chaperon. The entertainment of the evening was a taffy pull, the guests enjoying a very pleasant evening.

Dr. B. F. Butler, who was for a number of years resident dentist at Arlington, arrived in Bend Tuesday and has decided to take permanent location here. He has leased the only remaining office in the bank building and will be ready for business in a day or two. The Bulletin has received a number of letters from people who know Dr. Butler, commending him highly as a citizen and for his professional skill. The doctor's family is now visiting in Polk county but will soon join him here.
