FRIDAY - MAY 5, 1905

The trout fishers are beginning to bring in long strings and tall stories. And the owners of river lands are fast erecting trespass notices and barring the landless from the choice fishing holes.

The Bulletin has information, the source of which cannot now be given, indicating that active construction of the Columbia Southern railroad toward Bend will be begun within 60 days. Definite official announcement will probably be made within the coming two weeks.

The O'Kane fire demonstrated that the Deschutes lumber burns slowly and it will not be a difficult matter to control fires in Bend when there shall be water available. Perhaps this explains why our forests are so immune from fire—the wood does not burn readily. It is clear that even a bucket brigade and an open ditch will subdue any fire here that can be reached with buckets.

A CHILDISHLY WEAK PLEA.
How the sympathizers with the land swindlers do grieve over the hard name Oregon is getting because of the bold and systematic thieving that has been brought to light! The Salem Statesman is one of these weepers. "The laws were adopted by men ignorant or blind to the conditions," it wails in anguish. "It required a Hitchcock to show how laws could work to a state's undoing."

Many a convicted felon has been given to similar lamentations. "How easily might I have borne an honored name had I respected the law!"
"For this girl you with sackcloth, lament and howl," said the Prophet Jeremiah; "for the fierce anger of the Lord is not turned back from us."

It is doubtless more uncomfortable for thieves of high degree to be brought to bay than for those who have been less prominent in their transgressions. But is that the fault of the law? These upper-crust offenders are themselves partially responsible for the conditions of the law.

This is not the first time the law and the agencies of the law have been scolded because they stand between the plunderers and the general welfare. "No man e'er felt the halter draw, with good opinion of the law." Are we for that reason to change the law whenever a person wants something that the law would forbid? Is that not just what the law is for—to protect public and private property and rights from those who would take them unjustly to serve selfish and illegitimate ends?

Too often there has been one law for those who would pick your pocket in a crowd and another for those who would plunder the public of priceless treasures. While execration and the prison cell have been the portion of the petty thief, admiration and honor have been the "reward of merit" for the grand larcenist and purjurer, if only his offense were grand enough. Now it is different. We are getting a square deal for every man. For this do the fancy offenders "lament and howl," but "the fierce anger of the Lord is not turned back"—at least not yet.

While there is no excuse for the big offenders now in the pillory, it may be too harsh to judge their minor imitators by the same standard. It must be admitted that irregularities in the administration of the public lands had grown to be so much the rule that the ordinary citizen was largely justified in the belief that the prevailing practice was right. In many cases there was no criminal intent on the part of the offender. This excuse, however, will not apply to those whose knowledge of law and business, and whose opportunity for knowing more than the local practice, made them acquainted with the fact that their acts were illegal. They are in no sense innocent. Their disregard of the law made trouble for others as well as themselves. If the law was wrong it was their duty to try to have it corrected, but so long as the law stood it was for them, "quite as much as the humblest citizen, to obey it. To cry now that it was the law that was wrong and not their acts is too childish to receive consideration of grown men.
