BUCKING BRONCHOS RARE.

Outlaw Horse of Years Past is Becoming Antedated.

The outlaw horse of years past, the hero of broncho-bucking in the south and west is rapidly becoming a thing of the past, and in 10 years will be more scarce than the fast-dying buffalo and the old-time cowboy, according to John M. Kuykendall, who makes a specialty of procuring the wildest horses that can be procured for backing contests.

"Ten years ago the outlaw was as plentiful as jack rabbits," said Mr. Kuykendall, "but I have been able to get only about 30 real buckers that will put up a good fight out of 50,000 horses that I have looked at during the last year. The outlaw horse comes from the poorest blood that roams the ranges of the West. He is a criminal among horses just as surely as men who go wrong have bad blood in their veins. His parents are in nearly every case mustangs, and the stock is the same as that which roamed the plains of the West in the early days and degenerated through uselessness.

"Nearly any horse will buck if you turn him loose in a pasture several months and then try to ride him, but he will kick up only a few times and then quit. The outlaw will buck, though, after he has been ridden successfully, just as soon as another man gets on his back. It takes years to break him of the habit, and he is never safe. If he gets a chance he will start off bucking again and he always is dangerous.

"You rarely hear of a famous buckner now, although 10 or 20 years ago every large range had several outlaws that nobody could ride. The cowboys can ride as good as the old-time cowboys, and they are not degenerating. The breed of horses throughout the country is improving steadily, and this is the death knell of the outlaw. It will take away some of the most picturesque Western life when they go entirely, but that is going rapidly anyway, and the horse owners will be the gainers."—Denver News.
