Another berry patch that has given a heavy yield of fruit this season is one on the old Sisemore place, now in the possession of Dr. C. W. Merrill. This patch of red raspberries was set out two years ago and the amount of fruit picked from it this season has been very gratifying indeed. In fact, there has been more fruit than the renters and Dr. Merrills could use.

F. M. Booth recently sold his 160-acre ranch near Sisters to John Bloss, consideration being $2,100. Mr. Booth has lived on the ranch for 14 years and dislikes very much to leave it, but thought it best to move to a different climate in hope of getting relief from the pangs of rheumatism. However, now that the ranch is sold he doubts if he will ever be satisfied anywhere else and is about persuaded that this climate is as healthful a one as he will find in any place.

Down at Tethrow bridge there is an orchard that is making a fine record this year. Apple trees of the Maiden Blush and June Red varieties are so loaded with fruit that the branches are being broken from the tree by the weight of the fruit and for lack of support. Pears are also doing well. Corn at this same place stands nine feet tall.

RESIDENCE IS POOR.

Special Inspector Says Homesteaders Are Weak on Residence.

M. A. Meyendorf, special inspector for the General Land Office, has about finished his work in these parts and will soon take his departure. Since finishing his investigations, with other federal officials, of the D. I. & P. Co. and Columbia Southern segregations, he has been kept busy inspecting homestead and other land filings hereabouts. Wednesday he cruised over certain timber lands which had been erroneously included in the Columbia Southern segregation and classed as desert land. This timber land, Mr. Meyendorf said, would of course have to be thrown out of the segregation.

Asked regarding the homesteads, Mr. Meyendorf said he found the homesteaders, as a whole, living up quite well to the requirements of the law. The greatest fault he found was the failure of quite a few to establish real and actual residence on their homesteads. He said a man could not have a fine house in town, well furnished, with a piano, books, and many of the comforts and luxuries of life therein and still call the homestead his actual home, especially when there was nothing there to show residence but an old claptrap of a shack, built with the evident intention of hauling it away as soon as title was secured. However, he found others living up to the full intent of the law.

Mr. Meyendorf's early life was full of excitement and the story of it reads like a novel. He is of Polish descent and fought when a mere lad against the Russian forces. One day while retreating after a battle, he and two older brothers were captured. Later he was exiled to Siberia for life. At that time, he was 12 years and eight months old, as he stated it.

In the meantime a half brother of his came to America, fought with the Federal forces in the Civil war and was breveted several times for bravery, thus attracting the attention of his commanding officers. Through friends thus made the half brother prevailed upon President Lincoln to undertake to procure the release of young Meyendorf from his life of exile in Siberia. Whereupon Lincoln made a request to the Russian government that it release Meyendorf, and couched the request as a special favor to the United States government. Mr. Meyendorf was released and came to America, after having served somewhat more than a year in Siberia.

He was educated at Ann Arbor, received an important appointment under Grant connected with the building of the U. S. mint at Helena, and when that work was done was appointed melter in that institution, which position he held for many years with much credit to himself. He has been in the employ of the United States nearly all the time since graduating from Ann Arbor.

Mr. Meyendorf is a son of one of the titled families of Poland.
