SUPPORT THE UNIVERSITY.

It is a pitiful sight and a sad commentary on the intelligence of the people of a state, to see a state university struggling along with insufficient funds in as rich and prosperous a commonwealth as the state of Oregon. And that is the sight that now confronts the people of this state. Their university is woefully in need of funds to carry on its work. Professors are teaching without salaries, the school is hampered for want of equipment, and the completion of new buildings is stopped because future appropriations have been insufficient and because the last appropriation has been held up by the Oregon state grange for a referendum vote. This is a woeful condition of affairs.

It should not be necessary to argue the need of an efficient state university at this day and age. The welfare of the country and perpetuity of our government demands an educated citizenship. A republic can not exist whose citizens are unenlightened. An educated voter is the surest protection against graft and tyranny. These are acknowledged truisms and they no longer need argument to uphold them. Then why is Oregon so parsimonious in the support of its university?

Other states spend vast sums each year on their universities. Michigan, Minnesota, Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa have large and growing institutions of education, and each legislature is called upon to appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars for the support of their universities. And the appropriation is forthcoming. These various institutions are a source of pride to their states. Numerous mammoth buildings of brick and stone, an efficient corps of high-salaried teachers, large and well-equipped laboratories, extensive libraries, and hundreds of intelligent students all stand as a monument to the value placed on education by the people of those states. To support it takes money and much of it, but the passing years have shown its expenditure to be a wise investment.

Oregon is fairly launched in an extensive campaign of advertising in an endeavor to increase its population. A bankrupt university will not help to draw new citizens within our borders. Rather will they desire to make their home where their children can secure all the advantages of higher education. Oregon should offer to them as good facilities in this line as they enjoyed in the state that they leave.

The appropriation for the university by the last legislature has been held up by the state grange, which society will refer it to a vote of the people at the June election. The grange maintains that the appropriation is excessive. In that it is mistaken. Oregon should have a well supported, prosperous and growing university, and any policy that hinders and retards it is short-sighted and unwise. The action of the grange is to be condemned.

Let every voter take a stand at the June election in favor of making Oregon's university as efficient as those of her sister states. Vote for the university appropriation.

Walter Wellman, writing from New York for the Chicago Record-Herald, says that Wall street has been chastised, is repentant and ready for reform. The awakening is due to the fight conducted by President Roosevelt and to aroused public opinion. Wellman says that the leaders of Wall street are sick of the robbery, plunder, scandals, and steals that the last few months have disclosed in the business methods of the Wall street stock exchange. That may be true, but we doubt it. We fear it is not so much repentance for their ungodly methods, as it is remorse at being caught. The present condition of Wall street is expressed in the lines:

The devil was he;
 The devil a monk would be.
 The devil got well;
 And the devil a monk was he.

NO FAULT TO FIND.

A great protest is being made by the newspapers of the country over the recent ruling of the postmaster-general which stipulates that a publisher can not mail his paper to subscribers who are a year or more in arrears. The Bulletin has no objection to such a ruling. It has only a few subscribers who will be affected by the rule, and these will undoubtedly pay up. It is a slipshod business method that allows a subscriber to take a paper two, three, four, or five years without paying for it, and then when asked to pay probably gets mad and refuses to do so. If a subscriber is financially unable to pay for a paper he should not subscribe for it; if he is able and neglects to do so year in and year out, The Bulletin has no desire to have his name on its list, and no paper that is run on good business lines would want such a subscriber.

If a paper is worth reading it is worth paying for, and paying for promptly. Nearly every publication outside of the country weeklies now demands that its subscriptions be paid in advance. There is no sufficient reason why the country weekly should not adopt the same rule, or at least should not refuse to extend credit longer than a year. The country newspaper has too long been considered a philanthropic institution, dedicated to the free use of the public. That idea is passing away and with its passing will come a better, more efficient and more independent country press. If a paper's service possesses value it should be paid for in dollars and cents; if a paper has no value it should be allowed to go to the wall.

The Bulletin has no quarrel with the new ruling. It has made a rule of wedding out those subscribers who allow their subscriptions to run indefinitely, and for that reason undoubtedly has the cleanest list of bona fide subscribers of any paper in the county. One paper raises the objection that if these delinquent subscribers are cut off the list it depreciates the value of the paper as an advertising medium. It might be asked what advertiser wants to do business with an individual who makes a habit of allowing bills to run indefinitely. That is the only class that will be cut off.

The Bulletin's subscribers pay for the paper. It has no desire for the other kind.

In a public speech at Portland Tuesday night Francis J. Heney opened his broadsides on Senator Chas. W. Fulton, as he had promised to do before he left Oregon. He produced affidavits and other evidence to show that Fulton was a corruptionist of the first water, that he had bribed legislators and bought their votes, that he had used his influence to protect land grabbers, and that instead of representing the people of Oregon he was rather the paid servant of the railroads. It's up to Fulton either to prove Heney's statements false or retire from public life. Oregon has no time for public servants who spend their time and talents as Eugene Register.

Every indication points to Hill, or his interests at least, as being behind the Portland, Eugene & Eastern Railway now built out of Portland as far as Salem and which is to be extended to this city, on up the McKenzie and on over into Eastern Oregon. If Hill interests are backing this road, there will be great things doing in this part of Oregon. It will mean a branch line out of here to the Siuslaw and the making of Eugene the second city in size in Oregon, as shown by the title of the new road—Portland, Eugene & Eastern—the two leading cities of the state. Eugene being coupled with the metropolis in this big railroad enterprise is an advertisement few of our citizens fully appreciate. Building of the road to this city with extension across the mountains east, also west to Florence and on to Coos bay, will cause Eugene to grow as it has never grown before.

BEND, Oregon, Jan 21, 1908 —
 EDITOR THE BULLETIN—Dear Sir, I want to tell you what I think of your editorial of last week, entitled "Doing Good Work." In vulgar parlance it was "A Jim Dandy." I wish it might be printed in bold type and hung in every house, and in every store window in town so that the people would become familiar with it and "ponder it in their hearts."

I don't want anything, and you needn't say, "Here is my pocket-book." I just wanted you to know that I appreciated it, and I don't believe that editors are averse to having people say that they appreciate their efforts.
 Yours sincerely,

New Church at Silver Lake.

Silver Lake Baptists will soon build a new church, which will be valued at $6,000 when completed. The lumber for this structure has been donated by the officials of the National Forest, who give the logs free of charge. The building as planned will be a modern structure having three departments. The auditorium will be 40x50, with elevated floors. The Sunday school, or prayer meeting room, will be 16x24 and the pastor's study 16x16.
