BEND WILL GROW.

and is not only anxious to, but will soon do so.

"Have you looked into our water-power possibilities," he was further asked.

"Not extensively, but as I traveled up the river this morning I could see that you have fine water-power. Of course a sawmill does not need waterpower as it can provide its own power by burning its waste material, but your waterpower will be great with which to develop electric power for railroads, manufactories, and for lighting."

Chooses Site for Mills.

Mr. Shevlin touched on politics somewhat and stated that the cause of the panic was due to the general extravagance of the American people during a time of prosperity and to the fact that Wall Street had sold the country an overwhelming amount of watered stock. He stated that when the country recovers from this condition, and if Mr. Taft is elected and confidence is restored, then railroad building and all other industries will go forward with their usual speed. He said that Bend was fortunate in having so good a man at the head of the townsite and paid a high compliment to Mr. Steidl. He spoke of him as "honest and straight and not a hog," remarking that so many townsite men were either crooked or wanted to grab everything for themselves. Mr. Shevlin and Mr. Steidl have been acquainted for years in Minnesota, and it was through Mr. Steidl's efforts that Mr. Shevlin was induced to invest in the timber here. Mr. Steidl also induced Mr. Shevlin to locate his mills at Bend, which he not only promised to do but also said he would do all he could to induce the other lumbermen to likewise build their mills here. While here he chose a site for his mill adjoining the 265 acre millpond that can be made by damming the river near the Wm. Staats residence. The townsite company owns this land and is giving a mill site free of charge to those firms that will build and operate a sawmill thereon, the company to hold a free lease to the land as long as it operates its mill.

Means Much to Bend.

Mr. Shevlin's visit to Bend and his final choosing of a mill site at this place assures that Bend will some day be the headquarters of an extensive enterprise, with many people and with large payrolls. Furthermore, Mr. Shevlin's positive statements regarding the coming of a railroad and his close association with J. J. Hill, leads all to believe that the next few months will see the beginning of actual construction on a railroad into this long neglected section. When that comes there will take place a development that will make the entire Northwest sit up and take notice.

The Shevlin party came in in a large automobile from Shaniko. They left Tuesday morning for Prineville where they stopped a few hours and then proceeded to the railroad.

G. Springer and wife passed through Bend Monday on their way to Lake and Klamath counties, where Mr. Springer goes in the interest of his candidacy for state senator. He secured the democratic nomination for that office and is now making a campaign for election as an "out and out" State Senator. The common opinion seems to be that Mr. Springer will carry Crook county and will poll a good vote in Lake and Klamath.
