QUAINT EMBROIDERY.

Done by Hungarian Peasants in Somewhat Bizarre Effects.
Hungarian embroidery is done by the peasants of Hungary and has a charm all its own, being somewhat bizarre in effect and yet so distinctive that it is readily recognized. In Hungary this embroidery is always done on white-brown linen which is very strong and yet not too loosely woven.

It is important when choosing the linen for this work to see that the mesh is open enough to enable the needle and course cotton to be pulled easily through.

The cotton used in Hungarian embroidery is called cotton filosele, and it is generally used as it is without being separated. It has a beautiful glossy finish like silk. Its chief recommendation is that it washes extremely well, as the colors are fast.

A crewel needle or fine chenille needle with a large eye and sharp point is the right kind to use.

The designs for Hungarian embroidery are very characteristic and are all somewhat similar, partly on account of the coloring, which is confined to dark blue, red and dull yellow ochre in real old Hungarian work. Lately pale blues have been used, but this is somewhat of an innovation. There is something almost oriental in the richness of the reds and in the depth of the blues used for this needlework.

The apron illustrated shows the most usual style of design. The colors used are dark blue and red on heavy cream linen.

The details of these stitches are shown, and they can easily be learned with the aid of the illustrations. The work is quickly done and can be used for many purposes. Sideboard cloths are particularly suited to this kind of work. Designs for Hungarian embroidery can be obtained at the needlework departments already traced on to material, so that the worker need not of necessity have to trace her own design. It is not of course imperative to keep to the colors used by the Hungarians.

Mrs. S. Joyce, Claremont, N. H., writes: "About a year ago I bought two bottles of Foley's Kidney Remedy. It cured me of a severe case of kidney trouble of several years standing. It certainly is a grand, good medicine, and I heartily recommend it."—C. W. Merrill, Druggist.
