

The Pirate of Alastair

By RUPERT SARGENT HOLLAND

Author of "The Count at Harvard," etc.

Copyright, 1908, by J. B. Lippincott Company. All rights reserved.

CHAPTER XII.—(Continued.)
Motionless, he listened, and caught the regular heaving of a sleeping man, then distinguished that of another, and finally heard some one turn and grunt. In some inexplicable way, these men had happened to camp just above the spot chosen by Duponceau to hide his chest.

I scarce dared turn and crawl away from fear of waking the sleepers, and so lay still, wondering if by any chance they could have already found the treasure, or if there might yet be an opportunity for us to remove it. Suddenly I felt Rodney grip my arm. "Listen," he breathed.

Off in the distance, clear and long, rose the osprey call. Duponceau was in some danger.

We wriggled away from the hemlock, crawled back through the woods, and stood erect only when we reached the edge. There we swept the beach and what we could see of the ship for signs of men, but the shore was still empty as the desert.

"Shall we run for it?" I asked.

"No," said Rodney; "if there are any men there, they're between us and the boat, or on the boat; we'll best keep close to the cliff until we get our bearings."

The advice was good; like Indians we made the fringe of the woods, keeping in shadow. When we were forced to leave this shelter we skirted the cliff, ready to crouch back at a call or to rush forward. As we neared the shadow of the headland we saw figures climb over the rocks of the little island sea and head up the beach—four men, silhouetted black against the white sand, and not one of them as tall as Duponceau.

"They haven't got him," I whispered; "at least, he is not with them."

"That's queer," said Rodney. "I haven't heard a shot fired. They must have boarded the ship."

We crossed the causeway, running lightly, and climbed on board. The deck was as empty as the beach had been when we first crossed it. I rushed below and poked in all the bunks, but not a trace of Duponceau was to be found. Rodney and I stood in the bow and peered across the rocks. We could see nothing save the woods and the sky.

"Well," said Islip at last, "that takes the cake. He's vanished, vanished, cleared out, and I dare say we'll never see his hair or his grin. This thing's getting positively spooky, Selden. Are you sure that the man was flesh and blood?"

"I certainly thought so," I answered. "But he came in the middle of the night, and he's gone at the same time. Strange! Where on earth could he go?"

"Search me," said Rodney. "I thought the adventure was almost too real to be true. Such things don't happen, you know—that is, not consecutively—within a day's ride of New York." He considered the matter gravely. "But what will Barbara say if she finds we haven't kept by him?"

"I was thinking of that myself," I answered, looking blankly at him.

Islip broke into a laugh—such an infectious laugh that I couldn't help joining him. "I dare say we're different in most ways, Selden," he said, "but we're alike in one. Well, here's how!" and he held out his hand to me.

We shook hands, half seriously, half in jest, and I took back all the unkind things I had ever thought about him.

We turned and went down the deck on the outer side of the mast. I heard Rodney exclaim and saw him stop and look at the rail where his hand rested. A small gold chain was fastened to the edge. He peered over the side, and then, to my utter amazement, began to throw off his clothes.

"What on earth—" I began, but Rodney only chuckled, and finished undressing. Then from somewhere out in the sea came the osprey's cry, clear, quavering to a minor cadence. Islip slipped over the side, crossed the rocks, and dived into the water.

I pulled on the chain and up came a bundle of clothes wrapped in Duponceau's cloak. Then I understood, and followed Rodney's example.

Never have I known such a swim as that, in the mystery of starlight, through a sea that seemed made of silver. We found Duponceau by his cry and followed him, resting now and then to float on the silver surface, and again racing hand over hand out through the mystery. We were no longer men, but free sea creatures, in our own element, undismayed.

We swam in a great circle, and at last Duponceau led us back to the ship. Day was breaking far out, beyond the Shifting Shoal. "I saw them coming," he said, "and so I hung my clothes from the side and took to the waves. They found nothing; perchance now they think me a ghost."

We told him our experience in searching for the chest, and he showed a great deal of perturbation, but finally came to the wise conclusion that we could do nothing in regard to it then.

It was my turn below, and I fell asleep, in a glorious glow from the swim, just as the sky was shading pink.

CHAPTER XIII.

When I awoke I found Rodney seated on the cabin table.

"Morning, Selden," he exclaimed. "By the way, who is Monsieur Duponceau?"

I shook my head. "I gave that question some time ago. How about breakfast?"

"I was thinking of that myself," said Rodney. "I don't mind being a hero, but I prefer to play the part on a full stomach."

"I'll signal Charles," I went up on deck, and found that the sun was high up, and shining on a glorious summer world. I fastened a napkin to the broken stump of the mast.

Fifteen minutes later we saw my canoe steal cautiously about the point of the cliff beyond my house and poke its nose in the direction of the ship. Charles brought the tiny craft alongside of us.

"They're watching the house closely, Mr. Felix," he said. "It was all I could do to get down to the river without their following."

The canoe had brought us hot coffee, eggs and rolls. We breakfasted in state in the cabin, with Charles to wait upon us. He had little news, beyond the fact that the pines were patrolled by a number of men.

After breakfast we passed the time as best we could, but the morning went slowly, and we were glad when lunch was ready. This was a meagre meal, made up of the scraps of the provisions Barbara had brought us. I told Charles that I preferred to have him stay with us, as there was no telling when we should need every able-bodied man we could find, and so he brought the canoe on board, stowed her on the after-deck, and devoted himself to the small duties on his new housekeeping.

Duponceau and Islip had slept little the night before, and shortly after lunch they took up their bunks to nap. I was on guard on the forward deck when I heard a voice call, "Ship ahoy!" and looked up to see Barbara on the cliff.

I called to Charles to take my place for a few moments and sallied forth to shore. Barbara joined me at the foot of the headland.

"Well?" she asked eagerly.

I told her the adventures of the previous night, and when I came to the early morning swim her eyes danced as she clapped her hands with delight. "Oh, I wish I had been out there with you!" she cried. "I've always wanted to try a swim in the dark."

"It's just as well you weren't," I answered sagely.

She looked somewhat longingly out to sea. "What a beautiful afternoon! And are the rest of the crew working?"

"The rest of the crew are sleeping. They had too much coffee for dinner last night, and it kept them awake."

"And what is Charles doing?"

"I pointed to the deck. 'He's on guard. That's the reason I'm here.'"

"Oh, that's it, is it? I thought you came to see me."

"And so I did. Suppose we sit here at the foot of the cliff, where we can look out to sea and can't be seen. There's a little nook I know of."

I found the place that I sought—a secret crevice in the rocks—and there we sat and watched the tide do its best to reach us as it bounded landward. The afternoon drifted past, and we, borne on its tranquillity, were now talkative, now silent. Barbara rolled her sleeves above her elbows, and played with the water in a little pool beside our ledge of rocks. Her dreaming eyes brooded over the ocean. I watched her, tried to turn my eyes seaward, felt the irresistible call, and came back to watching her. The time had come when I could think only the one thought.

The sun was low, Barbara was humming a little French song. The whole world was adorable.

"Barbara, I love you!"

The words were out, spoken without volition, all of themselves.

She looked up; her singing stopped, and the deep blush rose crept into her face, while her eyes shrank.

"Barbara, I love you. I have loved you since I first found you on the ship, and I shall go on loving you until I die. I can't help it; it's not only conscious, it's partly unconscious; it's just you calling to me. Barbara dear, you are all my hope in the world. You are the world. Will you marry me?"

I was leaning forward, thinking only of that sweet, that infinitely sweet face opposite.

She smiled, her eyes turning to watch the waves, and I waited spellbound for her answer.

"I haven't known you very long," she added, her voice low; "and what do you know of me?"

"Everything. All I could ever know—that you are the one woman in the world."

"But it's summer, and it's easy to say such things in summer. It's all part of the setting. I told you once you were a dreamer. Dreamers are apt to romance, and that is probably why you are now in love with the waves and the sunshine and—with me." The last words were just a whisper. She raised her eyes to mine for a fleeting second, then dropped her lashes. "Believe me, Barbara, it's not that; it's the truth—the truest thing in the world." She played with the water in the pool at her side.

"I like you—but, then, I like many. There's Rodney I like also. Perhaps I like you better because I have never seen you in town, nor anywhere but in your chosen country. But I can't forget that there are other treasures in the sea—how can you be sure you won't come upon another and a finer? Then, too, I like men who do things, men who fight and win out—and so you see," she finished, with a slight smile, "it's not that I like any one in particular less, but the infinite possibilities more."

"Then," I said stubbornly, "I will wait, and prove my meaning to you."

She raised her eyes frankly to mine. "I like that," she said.

After a time we walked back to her path and said good-by. The beach was empty. Islip was sitting on the ship's deck, and Barbara waved to him and he waved back. I felt sorry for him, somehow, for now I knew what he must feel. No wonder he couldn't go back to his beloved Wall Street.

"Good-by again," she said, and then, that the parting might not be too abrupt, she added, "I think I am growing almost as fond as you of your little kingdom. Rule it well."

"I shall. I have a great deal to prove now."

She smiled. "Felix of Alastair;" then she turned up the path.

I went back to the ship's mighty with resolves: I thirsted for great deeds to do. When I came on board I found plans for such deeds brewing.

CHAPTER XIV.

Duponceau had been brooding all day over the possibility of losing the contents of his precious chest, and so, after some argument, Rodney and he had decided to make the effort to move it to the ship that night. I pointed out the fact that in all probability the enemy knew nothing whatever of the chest's position, and had simply happened to camp in its neighborhood of that particular hemlock; but Duponceau's fears were aroused, and it was evident that he would be satisfied with nothing short of having the strong-box under his eyes.

"What the deuce do you suppose those papers are, that he should be so fearful about them?" I asked Rodney when we were alone.

He shrugged his shoulders. "Heaven knows! The man isn't crazy, for I've been studying him closely all day, and some experience with Wall Street has put me wise on cranks. No, there's a real, live mystery somewhere, and our friend Pierre is a somebody, though whether the Wandering Jew or the last Napoleon I can't say. Suffice it, he's got a treasure chest, and it's up to us to sit on it so tight that none of its pieces-of-eight can filter through."

Fortunately the night was cloudy, and about eleven we were ready to start. I had never felt so completely the desperado before. We were all three armed with revolvers. I carried a coil of rope round about my waist, and Rodney a dark lantern which Charles had found in the cottage. Duponceau was the least excited. He took command of our expedition with the assurance of a born leader, and, in fact, it was only his overweening confidence that gave the scheme the least prospect of success.

Just before we left the ship Charles joined us with two spades, and so, a party of four, we stole over the beach and into the dunes. Duponceau led us to the pines, thence we crawled inward, lying silent after each cracking twig, straining our eyes and ears for news. When we came to the hemlock we lay four abreast and so peered over at the tent that loomed vaguely white ahead. The only sound was a loud and resonant snore.

Duponceau crawled forward on one side of the tent, and then beckoned to me to do the same on the opposite side. When I had wriggled forward some ten feet I could look in at the tent, the sides of which were open to the summer breeze. One man lay within, sleeping. It was clear that the enemy had not expected us.

Duponceau stole to his feet, I did likewise. He entered the tent from one side, and I from the other. With a swift movement he was over the sleeping man, and had pinned him to the bed, while he thrust a handkerchief into his mouth. The sleeper started, struggled, moaned, and lay still; I held my revolver in his face. In a twinkling we had him bound and gagged, rolled from his bed of boughs, and laid at a little distance. While we did this Islip and Charles cut the guide-ropes, and the house of our enemies fell, collapsing like a great white balloon when the gas escapes. We cleared it away, and the place where the chest was hidden lay before us.

Then followed a strange scene for those unhistoric pines of Alastair. With ears keen for the slightest alarm, Duponceau and I dug Rodney holding his black lantern so as to aid us, Charles keeping watch. A foot down and my spade struck wood. In five minutes the chest was uncovered. Carefully we raised it and placed it on the ground. As his hand touched the unbroken lock I thought that Duponceau gave a little sigh of relief.

(To be continued.)

Sounded Romantic.

"There was one time in my life," said the fussy old bachelor, "when I really wanted a better half."

"Tell me about it," cooed the sentimental widow.

"Oh, there isn't much to tell," answered the f. o. b. "Some chap stuck me with a bad 50-cent piece."

His Choice of Evils.

Shall I forever from her part, Or wed her for better or worse? The former's sure to break her heart— The latter to break her purse.

New Top for Milk Jars.

Two purposes are served by the combined cover and handle for milk jars designed by a Massachusetts man as the name of the device indicates.

The cover is a circular piece of flat metal with clasp extending downward so as to engage the upper end of the neck of the jar or bottle. The handle, which is connected with the cover, has its lower end extending downward so as to form lock-buttons, which keep the top from sliding off the jar laterally. The device can be adjusted in a twinkling but it will not come off unless the handle is turned at right angles with the jar. When a bottle of milk is being carried by this means it can be swung around with no fear of the top coming off if anybody wants to swing it around.

To Can Asparagus. Select heads of asparagus as perfect as possible in every way. Wilting vegetables will not can nicely. In fact, the difficulties of canning vegetables like asparagus are so great it scarcely pays for the trouble. Trim and prepare the asparagus. Place it uncoked in the cans, filling as evenly as possible. Steam constantly for four hours. Fill the cans with boiling water. Screw on the covers as tightly as possible and stand away to cool, being very careful not to put them in a draft of air. When cold, tighten the covers and keep where it is dark and cool.

Apple Tery. Peel some fine cooking apples and slimmer them very gently till tender in a little water with a strip of lemon peel, a couple of cloves and a little sugar. Remove them and set them aside to cool. Cut some small rounds of sponge cake and moisten them with a few drops of wine. Arrange in a dish and place an apple on each; sprinkle chopped pistachio nut on the cake around the apples, each of which must be covered with a little liquid red jelly of the consistency requisite for coating the fruit. Set in a cold place until wanted, place a spoonful of whipped cream on each apple and serve.

Salmon Sandwiches. If a housekeeper has grown tired of the conventional sandwich she should try those made of salmon. They are most palatable. The salmon is flaked and moistened with mayonnaise and then put as a filling between two extra-thin slices of brown bread with the crust cut off. Sweet sandwiches are also in fashion for luncheons and after-theater parties. The newest ones, served by a clever housewife, have a filling of candied cherries, chopped fine and moistened with orange juice.

Preserved Cherries. Stone the cherries, preserving every ounce of juice. Weigh the fruit, allowing pound for pound of sugar. Put a layer of fruit to one of sugar until all is used up; pour over the juice and boil gently until the sirup begins to thicken. Use sour cherries.

Horseshoe Sauce. Grate two tablespoonfuls horseradish; stir it into one cup of thick cream, add one teaspoonful sugar and two tablespoonfuls of best vinegar. Stir well together; serve cold.

Short Suggestions. Tarragon vinegar is an essential touch to a sharp salad dressing. The best fluid to use in washing muslin dresses of delicate color is rice water. Silver may be cleaned and brightened by letting it stand half an hour in sour milk. One housekeeper advises the use of half a lemon for removing match marks from paint. To clean steel use emery powder and oil mixed into a paste. Polish with a clean duster. If your paint has been marred by careless scratching of matches, try rubbing it with the finest sandpaper. Glass tumblers, when being filled with hot water, should be stood on a tray or table. They are thus far less likely to crack than if held in the hand. Celery that has grown for three days is tough. It must be about two days old, or even one day's growth should be cut for use. If woody, pare it the same as rhubarb. Do not pour scalding water into vessels which have held milk. It cooks the milk on the sides of the vessel, making it more difficult to clean. Rinse first with cold water.

SOMETHING FOR EVERYBODY

Five books of fiction are published daily in this country.

The Salvation Army preaches the gospel in thirty-one different languages.

An investigation of the boy workers of London shows that the news boys are the healthiest and the bakers least so.

New York State has 15,000 uniformed and equipped citizen soldiers, yet Governor Hughes manages to get along with a staff of sixteen officers.

About 2,000,000 of the natives of Siam are kept busy cultivating rice. Several varieties are cultivated, some requiring only two months, while the others require up to six months to ripen.

M. Marcel Prevost has been elected to the Academie Francaise in succession to Victorian Sardou. There were four ballots, at each of which M. Prevost secured the largest number of votes.

Oil has been struck 150 miles south of Suez, on the Red Sea coast, the gusher giving increasing quantities daily, and indicating large reserves. The possibility of a cheap supply of fuel is a discovery of the greatest importance to Egypt.

An electric heater for thawing explosives is used at the Roosevelt drainage tunnel in Cripple Creek. It is in successful operation. The cost of this method of heating is about 10 cents for twenty-four hours, and is said to be far more economical than coal.

That valuable energy which should be conserved for thinking and doing is used by vegetarians in digestion. In the meat eater the steer does the drudgery of vegetable digestion for the man, while a vegetarian makes of himself and his faculties a kind of animal.—New York Press.

On its through trains one of the eastern railroads has installed a sanitary system of supplying water to passengers. In every car a slot machine is installed, which supplies paraffin drinking cups for 1 cent each. The passenger uses this paraffin vessel and throws it away after use.

Nathaniel Osborne, who used to blow the organ in the Brick church in Fairhaven, Conn., was once asked how much salary he received. "Twelve hundred dollars," he replied. "Twelve hundred dollars!" exclaimed the questioner in surprise. "Yes," replied Nat, "but that's for one hundred years."

It has been decided to remove the notice on the pier at Yarmouth, Isle of Wight, which runs as follows: "Any person going on the pier without first producing his railway ticket or paying the authorized toll or insulting or annoying the pier master or any other official is liable to a fine of £5."—London Evening Standard.

California is to try acclimating the Korean wild fig. The fig growing on a hardy vine, on trees, trellises and hedge rows to a height of thirty feet, bears a delicious fruit. Some of the seed has been sent to the department of agriculture, California State university. The fig grows wild in Korea and has proved of great value there.

The sofa on which Dickens died at Gadshill has just been presented to the Dickens museum at Portsmouth. He was at work on "Edwin Drood" on the evening before his death, when he came in fatigued and after a few words to his sister-in-law, Miss Hogarth, fell to the floor, never to speak again. The couch is of rosewood and covered with green plush.

The old gentleman was not accustomed to having the new railway in his town; upon seeing a train approaching he whipped up his horse and tried to cross the track in front of it. He and his horse came out safely, but the wagon was badly broken. When he found that he was not injured he called to the engineer: "Why, I thought you saw me coming."

Bishop Samuel Fallows of the Reformed Episcopal church, preaching in St. Paul's church, Chicago, recently, on "The Race for Life," took occasion to warn his congregation against automobile speeding. "Let your moderation be known to all men" should be inscribed on every car," said the bishop. "The commercial, military and other uses of the automobile are endless. We therefore hail its advent with joy not untempered, however, with a wholesome fear."

A decision of the court of appeals of New York, in a case which grew out of a dispute over the right to a car seat, holds that placing a piece of baggage in a seat does not preempt the space. The court rules that passenger cars are to carry persons, not baggage, and that filling a seat with luggage confers no title to the seat on the owner of the grip. In other words, if a traveler wishes to make sure of sitting in an ordinary day coach he or she must take a seat and hang on to it.

Ho—What did you discuss at your debating club this afternoon? She—Nothing. We just talked.

Magistrate—Are you a friend of the prisoner? Buxom Witness—No. I'm his mother-in-law.—New York World.

"Say something to the little boy," said Bobbie's mother. "Say, kid," said Bobbie, obediently, "kin you fight yet?"

"I hear you spent your vacation with friends." "We were friends during the first week."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"Are you going to take the late train to Chicago?" "No, the engineer of the train is going to do that.—Baltimore American.

Customer—Give me a bottle of Dupon's Stomach Bitters, Druggist—We haven't any in stock, madam, but here's something just as bad.

"There are two sides to every question," said the broad minded man. "Yes," answered Senator Borghum; "a winning side and a losing side."

"Why did you leave your last place?" asked the boss. "I got six months off for good behavior," answered the job seeker.—Chicago Daily News.

Boss—So you're engaged? Well, well! As for me, I wouldn't marry the best man on earth. Jess—You couldn't—I've got him.—Cleveland Leader.

Scott—I remember reading of a very rich man who said he'd sooner be poor. Mott—Yes, and probably you remember reading somewhere that all men are liars.

"I can't understand why Brown should have failed." "Nor can I. I always thought he was doing finely. He often came to me for advice."—Detroit Free Press.

"Did you have a good time at the Sunday school picnic, Bobby?" "I should say so," answered Bobby, enthusiastically. "There was three fights."—Buffalo Express.

"Why, Ethel, what's the matter?" asked her mother, as the little one almost choked at the dinner table. "I got a piece of bread head first down my cough pipe," explained Ethel.

"I never have no luck." "Neither do I," responded the other citizen. "Therefore I keep out of enterprises requiring large gobs of luck to be a success."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"We," remarked the young married woman, "try to see how few quarrels we can have in a year." "We," said the old married woman, "try to see how few cooks."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Judge—How did the trouble begin? Witness—It began, ye' honah, when de chairman of de entertainment committee swatted de secretary over de hald wif de lovin' cup.—Boston Transcript.

Sillicus—We should all strive to bear each other's burdens. Cynicus—Yes, most of us seem to think we could bear each other's burdens more easily than we could our own.—Philadelphia Record.

Bessie—Oh, Mabel! I am in an awful dilemma! I've quarreled with Harry and he wants me to send his ring back. Mabel—That's too bad, Bessie—but that isn't the point. I've forgotten which is his ring.—Kansas City Journal.

"What was the date of the Union of the Crowns?" asked the school inspector and the answer was "1602." "Right. And why was this date so important one for you to remember?" "Because you were sure to ask for it," returned the little victim of cramming.

De Quiz—Did he have any luck fishing? De Quiz—Well, he says he caught a number of fish, many of which would weigh three pounds. De Quiz—Yes, I guess it would take a great many of the fish he caught to weigh three pounds.—Chicago Daily News.

"You ran into this man at thirty miles an hour and knocked him forty feet," said the court. "That, or a little better, I suppose," answered the chauffeur. "Why didn't you slow down?" "Mere precaution, your honor. Once I shut off speed and hit a man so gently that he was able to climb into the machine and give me a lick."—

"Your husband'll be all right now," said the doctor, rubbing his hands with evident self-satisfaction. "What yer mean?" demanded the weeping wife. "You told me he wouldn't live a fortnight." "Well, I'm going to cure him after all," said the doctor; "surely you're glad to hear such unexpected news?" The woman wrinkled her brows. "Puts me in a bit of an 'ole," she said. "I've bin and sold all his clothes for his funeral!"