HANS WAGNER.

When Barney Dreyfuss, president of the Pittsburg club, sends out his contracts to his ball players he mails one to Hans Wagner that is free from ink except that placed on the paper by the printer. He doesn't put in the amount for which Honus is to play, leaving that to the "Hig Dutchman." There's nothing surprising about that, for Hans is worth whatever he thinks is right. But when he signed his first contract, a few months after he won his nickname of "Big Dutchman," he signed up for $35 a month.

A former player and manager declares that Hans Wagner had no thought of becoming anything but pitcher until 1895, when he became a member of the Steubenville club in the old Central Association. At that time Al Wagner, Claude Ritchey and Frank Bowerman were on the team. During a slump the manager sent out a call for a pitcher and Al asked that his brother Hans be given a chance. Well, that afternoon he had his tryout and lasted two innings. He had nothing but a straight ball that was so swift it went over the fence if hit or through the catcher if it wasn't.

Of course, he didn't make good, but the manager was so short-handed had to keep him around to play in the field, letting him eat and sleep with his brother. Then Hans took a shine to the job of shortstop and began to practice at it. Early in the morning and after the games he would get the kids to bat to him. Finding that he could not start quick enough, he dug holes in the field like sprinters do, but he was chased for spolling the diamond and had to practice when and where he could.

Finally he became fairly proficient. He could field all right, but was as awkward as a hog on ice. He picked up in batting and soon attracted the attention of rival clubs, but had made such an unfavorable impression with the manager that he was given to the Paterson club for nothing. There he signed a formal contract to play for $35 a month, his first regular salary as a player. There he made good with a vengeance, and the following spring was sold to Louisville for $2,500. He remained with the Colonels until the shift that took him to Pittaburg was made. And there he'll stay just as long as Harney Dreyfuss has money enough to cover the figures that Hans writes in the contract.
